In history a great volume is unrolled for our instruction. Burke, Rev. in France.

Hence—2. A collection of written or printed sheets bound together, whether containing a single complete work, a part of a work, or more than one separate work; a book; a tome: as, a large volume; a work in six volumes.

He furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes.
Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 167.

They [men] cannot extinguish those lively characters of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God which are every where to be seen in the large volume of the Creation.

Stillington, Sermons, i. III.

An odd volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

Luther's works were published at Wittenberg in Latin and German, in nineteen volumes, large folio, and at Jena in twelve. Burney, Hist. Music, III. 39, note.

3. Something of a roll-like, rounded, or swelling form; a rounded mass; a coil; a convolution; a wreath; a fold: as, volumes of smoke.

His in the spire Volumes of the Snake,
I lurk'd within the Covert of a Brake.

Dryden, State of Innocence, iv. 2.

Thames's fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play.
Fenton, Ode to John, Lord Gower, st. 3.

4. An amount or measure of tridimensional space; solid contents; hence, an amount or aggregated quantity of any kind.

An enormous log glowing and blazing, and sending forth a vast volume of light and heat.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 246.

The judge's volume of muscle could hardly be the same as the colonel's; there was undoubtedly less beef in him.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, viii.

Railroad men have found out . . . that so small a matter apparently as the civility or neglect of conductors, or the scarcity or abundance of towels on sleeping-cars, will sensibly influence the volume of travel.

D. A. Wells, Our Merchant Marine, p. 112.

Very probably these recent climatic changes, both marine and terrestrial, in the North Atlantic region, have been due in large measure to variations in the volume of the Gulf Stream. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XLII. 42.

5. In music, quantity, fullness, or roundness of tone or sound.—Atomic volume. See atomic.—Specific steam-volume. See steam.—Specific volume, the quotient of the molecular weight of a compound body by its specific gravity. In the case of a liquid the specific gravity is taken at the boiling-point.—To speak or tell volumes, to be full of meaning; to be very significant.

The epithet, so often heard, and in such kindly tones, of "poor Goldsmith" speaks volumes.

Irving, Oliver Goldsmith, xlv.

Volume-integral. See integral.—Syn. 4. Bulk, Magnitude, etc. See size.

volume (vol'ūm), v. i.; pret. and pp. volumed,
ppr. voluming. [< volume, n.] To swell; rise in bulk or volume.

The mighty stream which volumes high
From their proud nostrils hurls the very air.

Byron, Deformed Transformed, l. 1.

volumed (vol'ūnd), a. [< volume + -ed.] 1.
Having a rounded form; forming volumes or rolling masses; consisting of rounded masses.

With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one white sky of sulphurous hue.

Byron, Siege of Corinth, vi.

2. Having volume or volumes (of a specified amount or number).

volumenometer (vol'ū-me-nom'e-tēr), n. [Irreg. < L. volumen, a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring the volume of a solid body by the quantity of a liquid or of air which it displaces, and thence also for determining its specific gravity.

volumenometry (vol'ū-me-nom'e-tri), n. [As volumenometer + -y.] The art of determining by displacement the volumes of solid bodies, or the spaces occupied by them; stereometry.

volumeter (vol'ū-nō-tēr), n. [Irreg. < L. volumen, a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] In chem. and physics, broadly, any instrument for measuring the volumes of gases, as a graduated glass tube in which a gas may be collected over water or mercury, the gas displacing the liquid as it enters the vessel, and the volume displaced being indicated by the graduations. Lange's volumeter comprises a tube called a reduction tube, in which a volume of one hundred cubic centimeters of air as measured under connected pressure of barometer and temperature is confined. By an ingenious arrangement this confined air is then made to bring to a similar condition of pressure the gas to be measured in a measuring-tube, which also forms part of the apparatus. Thus a connection of pressure and temperature need be made only once for a series of volumetric measurements.

volumetric (vol'ū-met'rik), a. [Irreg. < L. volumen, a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] In chem. and physics, pertaining to or noting measurements by volume, as of gases or liquids:
opposed to gravimetric.

It is possible in this way to determine quickly by a volumetric process even so little as one-fourth per cent. of alcohol in a mixture. Ure, Dict., IV. 89.

Mosso's volumetric measurements indicated that in hypnotic catalepsy there was slightly more blood in the left arm. Mind, IX. 96.

Volumetric analysis. Same as titration.

volumetric (vol'ū-met'rik), a. [< volumetric + -al.] Same as volumetric.

The amount of metallic iron and its condition of oxidation in the ore were determined by Marguerite's volumet-rical method. Campin, Mech. Engineering, p. 397.

volumetrically (vol'ū-met'rik-ly), adv. [< volumetric + -ly.] By volumetric analysis.

voluminal (vō-lū'mi-nāl), a. [< L. volumen (-min-), volume, + -al.] Pertaining to volume or cubical contents: as, voluminal expansion.

voluminosity (vō-lū-mi-nos'i-ti), n. [< volumi-nosus + -ity.] The quality or state of being voluminous; copiousness; prolixity.

The later writings [of H. Müller-Stübgen] have gone on with bewildering voluminosity. Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 117.

voluminous (vō-lū'mi-nus), a. [< F. volumineux = Sp. Pg. It. voluminoso, < LL. voluminosus, full of windings, bendings, or folds, < L. volumen, a roll, fold: see volume.] 1. Consisting of coils or convolutions.

Woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast. Milton, P. L., II. 652.

2. Of great volume or bulk; large; swelling:
literally or figuratively.

Why, though I seem of a prodigious waist,
I am not so voluminous and vast
But there are lines wherewith I might be embraced.

B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxxi.

It was essential that a gentleman's chin should be well propped, that his collar should have a voluminous roll.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xvi.

We call the reverberations of a thunder-storm more voluminous than the squeaking of a slate pencil.
W. James, Mind, XII. 1.

3. Having written much; producing many or bulky books; also, copious; diffuse; prolix: as, a voluminous writer.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

4. Being in many volumes; hence, copious enough to make numerous volumes: used of the published writings of an author: as, the voluminous works of Sir Walter Scott.

voluminously (vō-lū'mi-nus-ly), adv. In a voluminous manner; in large quantity; copiously; diffusely.

The doctor voluminously rejoined.

Swift, Battle of the Books.

voluminousness (vō-lū'mi-nus-ness), n. 1. The state of being in coils or convolutions.

Solid bones crushed by the infinite stress
Of the snake's adamant voluminousness.

Shelley, A Vision of the Sea.

2. Copiousness; diffuseness.

His [Aquinas's] works mount to that voluminousness
they have very much by repetitions.

Dodwell, Letters of Advice, II.

3. The state of being voluminous or bulky.

The reader will have noticed, in this enumeration of facts, that voluminousness of the feeling seems to bear very little relation to the size of the organ that yields it.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 140.

volumist (vol'ū-mist), n. [< volume + -ist.] One who writes a volume; an author. [Rare.]

Yee write them in your closets, and unwrite them in your Courts, hot Volumists and cold Bishops.

Milton, On Def. of Hamb. Remonst.

voluntarily (vol'un-tā-ri-ly), adv. [*< ME. voluntarily; < OF. (and F.) volontaire = Sp. Pg. It.
voluntario, < L. voluntarius, willing, of free motion; of one's own motion; without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others; spontaneously; freely.*]

When that Gafray had all thes thynges said, Raymounde hertly glade relyng that braide,
That Gafray gau hire voluntarily.

Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), I. 6055.

At last died, not by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his old age.

Purchase, Pilgrimage, p. 822.

And the faculty of voluntarily bringing back a wandering attention over and over again is the very root of judgment, character, and will.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 424.

voluntariness (vol'un-tā-ri-ness), n. The state of being voluntary, or endowed with the power of willing, choosing, or determining; the state or character of being produced voluntarily.

The voluntariness of an action.

Hammond, Works, I. 234.

voluntariously (vol-un-tā-ri-us), a. [< L. volun-tarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] Voluntary; free.

Men of voluntariously will withalite that heuens gouerneth.

Testament of Love, II.

voluntarily (vol-un-tā-ri-ly), adv. Voluntarily; willingly.

Most pleasantly and voluntarily to bear the yoke of his most comfortable commandments.

Strype, Eccles. Mem., Edw. VI., an. 1550.

voluntary (vol'un-tā-ri), a. and n. [*< ME. *voluntaric, < OF. (and F.) volontaire = Sp. Pg. It.
voluntario, < L. voluntarius, willing, of free will, < volūta(-)s, will, choice, desire, < volunt(-)s, volent(-)s, ppr. of velle, will: see volition, will.*] 1. a. 1. Proceeding from the will; done of or due to one's own accord or free choice;

unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not compelled, prompted, or suggested by another; spontaneous; of one's or its own accord; free.

The third sort of ignorance is the worst; it is that which is vincible and voluntary.

Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. i. 6.

Voluntary works be called all manner of offering in the church, except your offering days and your tithes.

Latimer, Misc. Ser.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing.

Shak., M. of V., II. 1. 16.

The true Charity of Christians is a free and voluntary thing, not what men are forced to do by the Law.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

I have made myself the voluntary slave of all.

Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, v.

Very little time was allowed between the accusation, condemnation, and death of a suspected witch; and if a voluntary confession was wanting, they never failed extorting a forced one by tormenting the suspected person.

Gifford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. xxiv.

2. Subject to or controlled by the will; regulated by the will: as, the movement of a limb is voluntary, the action of the heart involuntary.

We always explain the voluntary action of all men except ourselves on the principle of causation by character and circumstances. H. Stigwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 48.

It follows from this that voluntary movements must be secondary, not primary functions of our organism.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 487.

We see here that atrophy begins in the most voluntary limb, the arm.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXV. 174.

3. Done by design or intention; intentional;
purposed; not accidental.

Giving myself a voluntary wound.

Shak., J. C., II. 1. 800.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, . . . and kills another passing by, here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murder.

Perkins. (Johnson.)

4. Endowed with the power of willing, or acting of one's own free will or choice, or according to one's judgment.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending beforehand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. III. 2.

5. Of, pertaining, or relating to voluntarism, or the doctrines of the voluntaries: as, the voluntary theory or controversy.—6. In law: (a) Proceeding from the free and unconstrained will of the person: as, a voluntary confession.

(b) Not supported by a substantial pecuniary or valuable consideration. See voluntary conveyance, below.—Voluntary affidavit or oath. (a)

An affidavit or oath made in a case in which the law has not sanctioned the administration of an oath or affirmation. (b) An affidavit offered spontaneously or made freely, without the compulsion of subpoena or other process.—Voluntary agent. See agent.—Voluntary appearance, the spontaneous appearance of a defendant for the purpose of resisting an action or other proceeding without having been served with process, or without requiring the plaintiff to rely upon service of process to compel appearance.—Voluntary association. See association.—Voluntary bankruptcy. See bankruptcy.—Voluntary conveyance, a conveyance made without valuable consideration; a conveyance in the nature of a gift. The importance of the distinction between this and a conveyance for value is that the former may be voidable by creditors in some cases where the latter may not.—Voluntary escape. See escape.—7. Voluntary grantee, the grantee in a voluntary conveyance.—Voluntary jurisdiction, a jurisdiction exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognizable by any of the court judges, and in any place and on any lawful day.—Voluntary manslaughter. See manslaughter.—8. Voluntary motion. See motion.

—Voluntary muscle, voluntary muscular fiber, striated red muscular fiber (except that of the heart), as distinguished from smooth pale muscular fiber: so called as being under the control of the will. See outer muscular.—Voluntary partition, a partition accomplished by mutual agreement, as distinguished from one had by the judgment of a court.—Voluntary school, in England, one of a class of elementary schools supported by voluntary subscriptions, many of them in part maintained and regulated by religious bodies. The number of these schools has been greatly reduced since 1870, when education was made compulsory by the Education Act, and board schools were established. In 1897 a sum, not to exceed in the aggregate five shillings per scholar annually, was granted to them by Parliament.

In building cottages, and improving voluntary schools.

Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 738.

Voluntary waste, waste which is the result of the voluntary act of the tenant of property, as where, without the consent of the proprietor, he cuts down timber, or pulls down a wall.—Syn. Voluntary, Spontaneous, Willing. Voluntary supposes volition, and therefore intention, and presumably reflection. Spontaneous views the act as though there were immediate connection between it and the cause, without intervention of the reason and the will: spontaneous applause seems to start of itself.
Willing has in the authorized version of the Bible a range of meaning up to desirous or anxious, as in Mak. i.
19, xxvi. 41, Luke x. 29, but now is strictly confined to the negative sense of consenting, or not refusing or objecting, in regard to the wish of another.

Some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother.

Huxley, Critiques and Addresses, p. 54.

Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play.

The soul adopts, and owns their first-born away.

Goldsmith, Des. VII., l. 255.

He lent a willing ear to the artful propositions of Sforza.

Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., li. 1.

II. n.; pl. voluntaries (-riz). 1. One who engages in any affair of his own choice or free will; a volunteer.

Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,

With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens.

Shak., K. John, li. 1. 67.

Specifically—2. Eccles., in Great Britain, one who maintains the doctrine of the mutual independence of the church and the state, and holds that the church should be supported by the voluntary contributions of its members and should be left entirely free to regulate its affairs.—3. Any work or performance not imposed by another.

At school he [Wordsworth] wrote some task-verses on subjects imposed by the master, and also some voluntaries of his own, equally undistinguished by any peculiar merit.

Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 200.

4. In church music, an organ prelude to a service; sometimes, by extension, an interlude or postlude; also, an anthem or other piece of choir-music, especially at the opening of a service. These uses of the word seem to have originated in the fact that such musical exercises are not rubrically prescribed.

The rich may indulge in superfluities. The Ionian muse is somewhat too fond of playing voluntaries.

Landor, Imag. Conv., Virgilus and Horatius.

My dear Herr Capellmeister, they say you play the most exquisite voluntaries! Now do play us one.

Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 4.

At voluntary, voluntarily; by an effort of will.

Cyres cuppes were too strong for all antidotes, and women's flatteries too forceable to resist at voluntary.

Greene, Never Too Late (Works, ed. Dyce, Int., p. xli).

voluntary (vol'un-tā-ri), adv. [< voluntary, a.] Voluntarily.

Gold, amber, yvorie, perles, owches, rings,

And all that els was pretious and deare.

The sea unto him voluntary brings.

Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 23.

I serve here voluntary. Shak., T. and C., li. 1. 103.

voluntaryism (vol'un-tā-ri-izm), n. [< voluntary + -ism.] Voluntary principle or action; the system or principle of supporting anything by voluntary contribution or assistance; especially, the principle of unrestricted personal liberty in matters of religion—this involving on the one hand the obligation of church-members to support and maintain religious ordinances, and on the other the church's entire freedom from state patronage, support, and control.

Eather . . . was unable at present to give her mind to the original functions of a bishop, or the comparative merits of Endowments and Voluntaryism.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, xli.

The transatlantic friend of Vane, at the very nick of time, was the central champion in England of absolute voluntaryism, against the Independents and the famous fifteen proposals for a State Church on their sort of "Christian Fundamentals." N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 541.

In education, voluntaryism has been most prominent and most beneficial from early times.

Journal of Education, XVIII. 148.

voluntaryist (vol'un-tā-ri-ist), n. [< voluntary + -ist.] One who believes in or advocates voluntaryism, especially in religion. [Rare.]

We commend this tribute to the Church of England to our friends on the other side of the water, as proof that an American and a Voluntaryist can yet do full justice to that ancient and historical church.

New York Evangelist, Oct. 18, 1876.

voluntative (vol'un-tā-tiv), a. [< L. voluntat(-)s, will, + -ive.] Voluntary.

The simple solution seems to be that the conditioning of a purpose destroys its absolute voluntative power.

Amer. Jour. Philol., IV. 425.

voluntet, n. See volunté.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), n. and a. [< F. volontaire, now volontaire = Sp. Pg. It. voluntario, < L. voluntarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] I. n. 1. A person who enters into any service of his own free will.

He has had compassion upon Lovers, and generously engag'd a Volunteer in this Action, for our Service.

Congreve, Way of the World, v. 14.

2. A person who enters military service of his own free will, and not by constraint or compulsion; one who offers to serve, and generally receives some consideration or privileges on that account; in the United States, especially during the civil war, a soldier of a body other than the regular army, but practically governed by the same laws when in service. In Great Britain the government provides the various bodies of volunteers, or citizen-soldiers, with competent instructors, arms, and a part of their ammunition, besides allowing to each corps certain grants proportioned to the number of efficient members, etc. A British volunteer can resign on giving a fortnight's notice, except in a crisis of imminent danger to the country. In the United States the army of volunteers comprises, to all intents and purposes—(1) the regular unpaid forces of State militia which, when called into the actual service of the United States, receive pay from the government, and are subject to the rules and articles of war, and (2) that class of troops which may from time to time be raised by Congress on occasions of national emergency. Such troops are properly United States troops, and the method of officering them is designated by Congress.

At the very outset of the campaign, the inexperience of the Federal volunteers was made evident, even more on the march than on the battle-field.

Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 193.

Volunteers often complain that they are not taken seriously enough. . . . Nor must they ever cease complaining until they have been thoroughly organized for whatever their duties are to be, and until those duties are perfectly clear to themselves and the country at large.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 615.

3. In law, one who claims the benefit of a contract or conveyance although no consideration proceeded from him nor from any one in whose place he stands.—4. A tree which grows spontaneously: as, that pear-tree in my garden is a volunteer. [Southern U. S.]

II. a. 1. Entering into military service by free will and choice: as, a volunteer soldier.—2. Composed of volunteers: as, a volunteer corps.

The volunteer artillery, furnished by the several States, was only organized into batteries, having no officer above the rank of captain.

Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 275.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), v. [< volunteer, n.] I. trans. To offer, contribute, or bestow voluntarily, or without constraint or compulsion.

The chief agents who had already volunteered their services against him.

Gifford, Note on B. Jonson's Poetaster, iii. 1.

Hit by hit, the full and true

Particulars of the tale were volunteered

With all the breathless zeal of friendship.

Browning, Ring and Book, I. 292.

II. intrans. To enter into any service of one's free will, without constraint or compulsion: as, to volunteer for a campaign.

volunteerly (vol-un-tēr'li), adv. Volunarily; as a volunteer.

Volunteerly to ramble with Lord Loudon Campbell,

Brave May did suffer for a'.

Battle of Sheriff-Muir ('Child's Ballads, VII. 158).

voluntomotory (vol'un-tō-mō'tō-ri), a. [< volunt(-)ary + motory.] Having or pertaining to motor influence or effect which is voluntary, or subject to the will: with Remak specifying the somatopleural division of the body, including the muscular system of ordinary language, as distinguished from the splanchnopleural or involuntomotory (which see).

The voluntomotory, corresponding to the body-wall or somatopleure. Ehryc. Brit., VIII. 157.

volunt, n. [< ME. volente, also volente, volente, < OF. volente, volente, F. volente = Sp. voluntad = It. volontà, will, < L. voluntat(-)s, will, desire: see voluntary.] Will; wish; will and pleasure.

voluptet, n. See volupté.

voluptuary (vō-lup'tū-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. voluptuaire = It. voluttuario, < L. voluptuarius, for earlier voluptarius, of or pertaining to pleasure, < voluptat(-)s, enjoyment, delight: see vo- lupt.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or contributing to luxury and sensual pleasure; promoting sensual indulgence.

The arts which flourish in times while virtue is in growth are military, and while virtue is in state are liberal, and while virtue is in declination are voluptuary.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II.

The works of the voluptuary arts are properly attributed to Vulcan, the God of Fire.

Bacon, Physical Fables, II., Expl.

2. Given to sensual indulgence; voluptuous: as, voluptuary habits.

II. n.; pl. voluptuaries (-riz). A man given up to luxury or the gratification of the appetite and other sensual indulgences; a sensualist.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and low conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul?

Sir R. L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries of that time, . . . men who, notwithstanding they professed themselves Jews, lived like Heathens.

Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xli.

We have the Voluptuary, when first pleasant feelings, and secondly the pleasantness of pleasant feelings, are made the end to which all else is means, and the abstraction of pleasure's sake is pursued.

F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 253, note.

voluptuater (vō-lup'tū-āt), v. t. [< L. voluptuosus + -ate.] To make luxurious or delightful.

'Tis watching and labour that voluptuates repose and sleep.

Peltham, Resolves, II. 44.

voluptuosity (vō-lup'tū-ōs'i-ti), n. [< voluptuosus + -ity.] Voluptuousness.

In some children nature is more prone to vice than to virtue, and in the tender witten ho sparks of voluptuosity.

Sir T. Elgot, The Governour, l. 6.

voluptuous (vō-lup'tū-us), a. [< ME. voluptuosus, *< OF. voluptuosus, F. voluptueux = Sp. voluptuously (vō-lup'tū-us-li), adv. In a voluptuous manner; with free indulgence in sensual pleasures; luxuriously; sensually: as, to live voluptuously.

Voluptuously surfelt out of action Shak., Cor., l. 8. 27.

voluptuousness (vō-lup'tū-us-ness), n. The state or character of being voluptuous, or addicted to the pursuit of pleasure and sensual gratification; luxuriousness.

But there's no bottom, none.

In my voluptuousness, your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up

The cistern of my lust. Shak., Macbeth, IV. 3. 61.

The voluptuousness of holding a human being in his [the slave owner's] absolute control

Emerson, West Indian Emancipation.

To the north-east, in places, the backs and sides of the mountains have a green, pastoral voluptuousness, so smooth and full are they with thick turf.

The Century, XXIV. 421.

volupty, n. [Early mod. E. also voluptie; < OF. volupté, F. volupté = Pr. voluptat = It. voluptà, voluttà, < L. voluptat(-)s, enjoyment, delight.] Voluptuousness. Sir T. Elgot, The Governour, III. 20.

Voluspa (vol-us-pā'), n. [< Icel. Völuspá, the song of the sibyl, < völu, gen. of völva, also völfa (pl. völur), a prophetess, sibyl, wise woman, + spá, prophesy, also pry, look, > Sc. spae: see spae, and cf. spae-wife.] 1. The name (literally, 'the Prophecy of the Sibyl') of a poem of the Elder Edda.—2. [l. c.] Erroneously, a Scandinavian propheteess or sibyl.

Here seated, the voluspa or sibyl was to listen to the rhymical inquiries which should be made to her, and to return an extemporaneous answer. Scott, Pirate, xxi.

Voluta (vō-lū'tā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), < L. voluta, a spiral, volute: see volute.] 1. The typical genus of Volutidae, used with various restrictions, now containing oviparous volutes with a short spire, large aperture, and long first columellar fold, as V. imperialis. See volute, 2, and Volutidae (with cuts).—2. In arch., same as volute. Evelyn, Architects and Architecture.

Volutacea (vol-ū-tā'sē-jī), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -acea.] A group of gastropods; the volutes. See Volutidae.

volutation (vol-ū-tā'shōn), n. [< L. volutatio (n.), a rolling about, a wallowing, < volutare, freq. of volvere, roll: see volute.] 1. A wallowing; a rolling, as of the body on the earth.—2. A compound circular motion consisting of a rotation of a body about an axis through its center combined with a revolution about a distant axis.

In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation.

Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, xxi.

volute (vō-lūt'), n. and a. [< F. volute = Sp. P.g. It. voluta, < L. voluta, a spiral scroll, a volute, < volvere, pp. volutus, turn round or about, roll, = E. wallow.] 1. n. 1. In arch., a spiral scroll forming an essential part of the Ionic, Imperial Volute (Voluta imperialis).

Voluta or Amorina undulata, of Australia, one of the Volutidae, crawling with extended foot and tentacles.

coiled in a helix somewhat in the form of a volute. It is commonly made in a conical form, so that the spring can be compressed in the direction of the axis about which it is coiled.

volute-wheel (vō-lūt'hwēl), n. 1. A water-wheel with a volute-shaped casing about it to guide the water to its vanes and buckets.—2. A volute-shaped shell, that in revolving presents its open mouth to the air, which is thus gathered into the tube and discharged through the hollow axis. It is a common and effective form of blower. E. H. Knight.

Volutidae (vō-lū'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -idae.] A family of rachioglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Voluta; the volutes. They have a large undivided foot, widely separate tentacles, eyes external to the tentacles, and a single (or triple) row of radular teeth, each median tooth generally having a trifurcate or simple apex. The operculum is generally absent; when present, as in Volutalyria, it is corneous and unguiculate, with apical nucleus in the adult. The animals are retractile in a shell generally of a more or less obconic shape, with a plicated columella. They are mostly ovoviviparous, but in the genus Voluta eggs are laid in a very large thin horny capsule. The species are numerous, especially in tropical seas, and many have shells of remarkable beauty, highly esteemed by conchologists. See Voluta (with cut) and volute, 2 (a) (with cut, and other cuts there cited).

volution (vō-lū'shōn), n. [< L. volvere, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] 1. A rolling or winding; a twist; especially, a spiral turn; a convolution.

The foaming base an angry whirlwind sweeps
Where curling billows rouse the fearful deeps. . . .
The swift volution and the enormous train
Let ages versed in nature's lore explain.

Falconer, Shipwreck, II. 43.

2. In conch.: (a) A whorl; one turn of a spiral shell. (b) A set of whorls; the spire of a shell; the spiral turning or twisting of a shell. See cuts under spire, 2, n., and univalve.—3. In anat., a convolution or gyration; a gyrus: as, the volutions of the brain.

volutite (vō-lū'tit), n. [< volute + -ite.] A fossil volute, or a similar shell, as a species of Volvaria (which see).

volutoid (vō-lū'toid), a. and n. [< volute + -oid.] 1. a. Resembling a volute; of or relating to the Volutidae.

II. n. A volute.

volva (vō'vā), n.; pl. volvae (-vē). [NL., < L. volva, volva, a wrapper, covering, < volvere, roll: see volute. Cf. culva.] In bot., a wrapper or external covering of some sort; specifically, in Hymenomyces, same as velum universale. Compare exoperidium. See velum, 2, and cut under Fungi.

Volvaria (vol-vā'ri-jī), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1801), < L. volva, a wrapper, cover: see volva, culva.] A genus of tectibranchiate gastropods, of the family Acteonidae, represented by extinct Tertiary shells, as V. bulloides: formerly including certain smooth shells of the family Marginellidae. See cut under volutite.

volvate (vō'vāt), a. [< volva + -ate.] In bot., producing, furnished with, or characteristic of a volva.

volvet (volv), v. t. [< L. volvere, turn, roll round or about, roll. From the same L. verb are ult. E. convolve, devolve, evolve, involve, revolve, etc., volute, voluti, vault, vault, etc.] To turn over; revolve, especially in the mind; consider; think over.

I volvet, tourned, and redde many volumes and bokes, conteynynge famous histories.

Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., Pref.

I have been volving and revolving in my fancy some time, but to no purpose, by what clean device or facete contrivance I might . . . modulate them.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy, V. 109. (Davies.)

volvelle (vol'vel'), n. [F.] A small and generally circular movable plate affixed to an engraving containing a dial or lottery, and made to carry the index-hand or pointer; any movable engraving superimposed on another for the purpose of showing variations. N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 217.

volvocineae (vō'vō-si-nā'shius), a. [As Volvocin-ae + -aceae.] Belonging to or characterizing the Volvocineae.

A peculiar condition of the Volvocineae Algae (Strophosphaera pluvialis, etc.).

H. C. Wood, Fresh-Water Algae, p. 236.

Volvocineae (vol-vō-sin'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < NL. Volvocin-ae + -ineae.] An order of fresh-water algae, of the class Cyanobacteria, typified by the genus Volvox.

volvocinian (vol-vō-sin'i-an), a. [As Volvocin-ae + -ian.] Resembling a volvox, as an infusorian; volvocineous.

I have cited the two volvocinian genera Pandorina and Volvox as examples of the differentiation of homoplastids into the lowest heteroplastids. Nature, XLI. 318.

Volvox (vō'voks), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), < L. volvere, roll, turn about: see volute.] 1. A small genus of fresh-water algae, of the order Volvocineae and class Cyanobacteria. It has a spherical cœnobium of a pale-green color, which is constantly rotating and changing place, looking like a hollow globe, composed of numerous cells (sometimes as many as twelve thousand) arranged on the periphery at regular distances, and connected by the maternal gelatin. It is furnished with a red lateral spot, contractile vacuoles, and two long-exserted cilia. Propagation is both sexual and non-sexual. V. globator, the best-known species, is not uncommon in clear pools, ponds, etc. It was long regarded as an infusorian animalcule.

2. [l. c.] A member of the above genus: as, the globose volvox.

volvulus (vō'vū-lus), n. [NL., < L. volvere, turn, roll: see volute.] Occlusion of the intestine, caused by a sharp bend or twist of the tube.

volyer (vō'yér), n. The lurcher. [Prov. Eng.] vomet, v. [< ME. vomien, < OF. vomer, < L. vomere, vomit: see vomit.] To vomit.

He shal hurtle the hond of Moab in his vomyng. Wyckif, Jer. xlviii. 26.

vomet, n. [ME., < vome, v.] Vomit.

Alle forsothe boordis ben fulfid with the vome and althis. Wyckif, Isa. xxviii. 8.

vomela, vormela, n. The Sarmatian polecat, Putorius sarmaticus. See sarmatic.

vomer (vō'mér), n. [NL., < L. vomer, a plow-share.] 1. In zool. and anat., a bone of the skull of most vertebrates; a membrane-bone or splint-bone developed in the median line of the skull, beneath the basicranial axis, primitively consisting of paired halves, which sometimes remain separate, one on each side of the middle line. Its special shapes and connections are extremely variable in the vertebrate series; in general, it is situated below or in advance of the basiophenoid, below or behind the mesothmoid, and between the maxillary, palatine, or pterygoid bones of opposite sides, serving thus as a septum between right and left nasal or nasopalatine passages. In man the vomer is plowshare-shaped, articulating with the sphenoid behind, the mesethmoid above, the palatal plates of the maxillary and palatal bones below, and the triangular median cartilage of the nose in front; it thus forms much of the nasal septum, or partition between right and left nasal cavities, its posterior free border definitely separating the posterior nares. In birds its extremely variable shapes and connections furnish valuable zoological characters. (See epithognathous, and cuts under demognathous, dromognathous, sauvognathous, and schizognathous.) The vomer is by Owen regarded as the centrum of the fourth or rhinencephalic cranial vertebra—a view now entertained by few, it being generally regarded as a mere splint-bone. It is wanting in many vertebrates. The so-called vomer of fishes and batrachians is not homologically the bone of that name in higher vertebrates, but is identified by some with the parasphenoid (which see, with cut); while others name the ichthyic vomer the antial bone. It often bears teeth. See cuts under Chelonidae, craniofacial, Cyclodus, Gallinæ, Lepidosteiræ, Ophidia, parasphenoid, Physeter, Pythonidae, Rana, teleost, and Thrinacoridae.

Section of Skull of Elephant, greatly reduced, showing Me, mesethmoid; Vo, vomer; an, pn, anterior and posterior nares.

The bones in Fish and Amphibians usually denominated vomers must part with their claims to that title and yield it to the so-called parasphenoid.

Sutton, Proc. Zool. Soc. Lond., 1884, p. 570.

2. In ornith., the pygostyle or rump-post; the large, peculiarly shaped terminal bone of the tail of most birds, consisting of several ankylosed vertebrae. See cut under pygostyle.—Wings of the vomer. See als vomeris, under ala.

vomerine (vō'mér-in), a. [< vomer + -ine.] Of or pertaining to the vomer.

vomic (vō'mik), a. [< L. vomicus, ulcerous, < vomico, a sore, boil, abscess, < vomere, vomit, Volutes.—1. Greek Ionic: Temple of Artemis, Ephesus. 2. Composite (Roman): Baths of Caracalla, Rome.

Corinthian, and Composite capitals, of which it is a characteristic ornament. The number of volutes in the Greek Ionic capital is four, two each on opposite faces. In the Corinthian and Composite orders they are more numerous, in the former order being sixteen in number. See helix, 2 (with cut), and cuts under Acanthus, Corinthian, Ionic, and composite. Also voluta.

2. In conch.: (a) A member of the Volutidae. The volutes are chiefly tropical shells, especially of Indo-Pacific waters, some of them of great rarity and beauty, and highly prized by collectors, as V. imperialis, the imperial volute, which shows beautiful sculpture and tracery, and has a diadem crowning the very large body-whorl (see cut under Voluta). The peacock-tail volute, Voluta (or Scaphella) junonia, of quite another form, is white with orange spots, and was long considered one of the rarest of shells, bringing a very high price. Many of the volutes being well known, they take more distinctive names. Such is the West Indian music-shell, Voluta musica, so called because the markings resemble written music. This species, unlike most volutes, is operculate, and is placed by some authors in another genus, Volutalyria or Musica. Some volutes are known as bat-shells, as V. operculata; others as yets or boat-shells and melon-shells (see cuts under Cymbium and Melo); and some forms, as Cymbium, are oviparous. See also cut under Volutidae. (b) A volution or whorl of a spiral shell.—Canal of a volute, a channel inclosed by a flat or fillet, in the face of the circumvolutions of the Ionic capital.—False volutes, the Turbinellidae. P. P. Carpenter.

II. a. In bot., rolled up in any direction.

volute-compass (vō-lūt'kum'pas), n. A form of compass used, in drafting, to trace a spiral by means of the gradual mechanical expansion of the legs.

volute (vō-lū'ted), a. [< volute + -ed.] Having a coil, whorl, or volute, as a shell.

volute-spring (vō-jūt'spring), n. A spring consisting of a flat bar or ribbon, usually of steel,

A Volute, the Music-shell (Voluta musica).

vomicæ (vom'i-kæ), n.; pl. vomicæ (-sæ). [NL., fem. of L. vomicus, ulcerous: see vomic.] In med., a cavity in the lung, resulting from a pathological process, and containing pus.

vomicene (vom'i-sen), n. [< vomicæ in nux vomica + -ene.] In chem., same as brucine.

vomic-nut (vom'ik-nut), n. [An E. rendering of NL. nux vomica: see nux vomica.] Same as vomit-nut.

vomit (vom'it), v. [< L. vomitus, pp. of vomere (> It. vomire = F. vômrir: see vome), vomit, discharge, = Gr. ἔμειν = Skt. √ vam, vomit. Cf. emetic.] I. trans. 1. To throw up or eject from the stomach; discharge from the stomach through the mouth: often followed by forth, up, or out.

The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up. Prov. xxiii. 8.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place; belch forth; emit.

During the night the volcano . . . vomited up vast quantities of fire and smoke. Cook, Second Voyage, iii. 5.

II. intrans. 1. To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth; puke; spew.—2. To be emitted; come out with force or violence.

vomit (vom'it), n. [= Sp. vómito = Pg. It. vomit, < L. vomitus, a throwing up, vomiting, vomit, < vomere, pp. vomit, vomit: see vomit, v.] 1. That which is vomited; specifically, matter ejected from the stomach in the act of vomiting; an attack of vomiting.

So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge, . . . And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 3. 99.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Whether a vomit may be safely given must be judged by the circumstances. Arbuthnot.

Black vomit, a blackish substance, consisting chiefly of disorganized blood, vomited in certain cases of yellow fever; also, the disease yellow fever.

vomiting (vom'i-ting), n. [Verbal n. of vomit, v.] 1. The ejection of matter from the stomach through the mouth. It is effected mainly by a spasmodic contraction of the abdominal muscles and diaphragm, occurring at the same time with dilatation of the cardiac orifice, assisted also by contraction of the muscular coats of the stomach itself.

2. That which is vomited; vomit.

Hold the chalice to beastly vomitings.

Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. i. 2.

Fæcal or stercoraceous vomiting, ejection by the mouth of fecal matter which has been regurgitated into the stomach from the intestine; copremesis.

vomitingly (vom'i-ting-li), adv. As in vomiting; like vomit.

Take occasion, pulling out your gloves, to have some epigram, or satire, or sonnet fastened in one of them, that may, as it were vomitingly to you, offer itself to the gentleman. Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 116.

vomition (vô-mish'on), n. [= It. vomizione, < L. vomitio(n), a vomiting, < vomere, vomit: see vomit.] The act or power of vomiting. [Rare.]

How many have saved their lives by spewing up their debauch; whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died.

N. Greu, Cosmologia Sacra.

vomitive (vom'i-tiv), n. [= F. vomitif = Sp. Pg. It. vomitivo; as vomit + -ive.] Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic.

It will become him also to know not only the ingredients but doses of certain cathartic or purging, emetic or vomitive medicines, specific or choleric, melancholic or phlegmatic constitutions, phlebotomy being only necessary for those who abound in blood.

Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 44.

vomit-nut (vom'it-nut), n. The seeds of the nux vomica tree, Strychnos Nux-vomica; quaker-buttons or poison-nut. See nux vomica. Also vomic-nut.

vomito (vom'i-tô), n. [Sp. vómito = E. vomit.] The yellow fever, in its worst form, in which it is usually attended with the black vomit.

The low, marshy regions are to be avoided . . . on account of the vomito—the scourge of those regions.

L. Hamilton, Mexican Handbook, p. 18.

vomitory (vom'i-tô-ri), a. and n. [= F. vomitore = Sp. Pg. It. vomitario, < L. vomitorius, vomiting (neut. pl. vomitatoria, the passages in an amphitheater), < vomere, vomit, discharge: see vomit.] I. a. Procuring vomiting; causing ejection from the stomach; emetic; vomitive.

II. n.; pl. vomitories (-riz). 1. An emetic.—2. In arch., an opening or passage, usually one of a regularly disposed series, in an ancient Roman theater or amphitheater, which gave di-Amphitheater at Verona, showing Vomitories.

The large archway is one of the main entrances to the arena; the smaller one to the right of the first is an opening of the first vaulted passage beneath the seats of the auditorium, the square openings are vomitories.

vomiturition (vom'i-tû-rish'on), n. [*< L. as if vomiturire, desire to vomit, desiderative of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] 1. Ineffectual attempts to vomit; retching.—2. The vomiting of but little matter, or vomiting with little effort.

vomitus (vom'i-tus), n. [L., prop. pp. of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] Vomiting; vomited matter.—Vomitus niger, black vomit; yellow fever.

vondsirat, n. Same as vansire. Flacourt, 1661.

Von Graefe's operation for cataract. See operation.

Von Patera process. See process.

voodoo (vô-dô'), n. and a. [Also voodoo; < creole F. vaudoux, a negro sorcerer, prob. orig. a dial. form of F. Vaudois, a Waldensian (the Waldensos, as heretics, being accused of sorcery): see Waldenses. Cf. hoodoo.] I. n. 1. A common name among creoles and in many of the southern United States for any practitioner of malicious, defensive, amatory, healing, or soothing enchantments, charms, witchcrafts, or secret rites, especially when they are tinged with African superstitions and customs; especially, one who makes such practices a business.

The unprotected little widow should have had a very serious errand to bring her to the voodoo's house.

G. W. Cable, Grandissimes, p. 90.

Every one has read of the noisy antics employed by the medicine-men among the Indians, and by the fetish-doctors and voodoos among the negroes, for driving diseases out of their patients.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 803.

2. The same title transferred by voodoos to a personal evil spirit supreme among evil powers.

But for the small leaven of more intelligent whites, the black people would soon be victims of voodoo. Indeed, it is hard to find a rural community in the South where that dreadful bugbear is not more or less believed in and feared.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 44.

3. pl. The practitioners of voodoo rites as a collective body.

II. a. Pertaining to or associated with the superstitions and peculiar practices of the voodoos: as, a voodoo dance (a violent indecent dance belonging to the secret nocturnal ceremonies of the voodoos); a voodoo doctor, or voodoo priest (the terms most commonly used in creole countries for any professional voodoo); voodoo king or queen (the person who, by a certain vague election and tenure, holds for life a local preëminence and some slight authority over all voodoos of the surrounding country).

voodoo (vô-dô'), v. t. [Also voodoo; < voodoo, n. Cf. hoodoo, v.] To affect by voodoo conjuration or charms.

What was the matter with her head, anyhow? She must be voodooed.

New Princeton Rev., I. 100.

The negroes [of Louisiana] took a dislike to the overseer, and sent to the city for a conjuror to come down and voodoo him. The conjuror undertook to rid them of the overseer for $50, but finally came down in his demand to $250.

The Century, XXXV. 112.

voodooism (vô-dô'izm), n. [Also voodooism; < voodoo + -ism.] The voodoo superstitions and practices. In the main these are only such fantastical beliefs and impotent secret libations, burnings, etc., as are everywhere the recourse of base and puerile conditions of mind. There seems to be little in voodooism to justify the term "worship"; and still less does it seem to contain any group of beliefs, myths, or pious observances that make it in any sense a separate religion.

voracious (vô-râ'shus), a. [= F. vorace = Sp. Pg. voraz = It. vorace, < L. vorax (vorac-), swallowing greedily, ravenous, < vorare, swallow, devour; cf. Gr. √ βορ in βορὰ, food, βρώμα, food (see broma), βρώσκω, eat, Skt. √ gar, swallow. Cf. vorant, devour.] 1. Greedy in eating; eating food in large quantities; marked by voracity; ravenous: as, a voracious man.

I have seen of the king carrion crows. . . They are very voracious, and will despatch a carcass in a trice.

Dampier, Voyages, an. 1676.

They are men of a voracious appetite, but no taste.

Addison, Spectator, No. 452.

2. Rapacious.

I would have removed this defect, and formed no voracious or destructive animals, which only prey on the other parts of the creation.

Goldsmith, Asem.

Confess to me, as the first proof of it [confidence], didst thou never shrink back from so voracious and intractable a monster as that accursed snake?

Landor, Imag. Conv., Alexander and the Priest of Hammon.

3. Ready to swallow up: as, a voracious gulf or whirlpool.—Syn. 1. Ravenous, etc. See rapacious.

voraciously (vô-râ'shus-li), adv. In a voracious manner; with greedy appetite; ravenously; rapaciously.

voraciousness (vô-râ'shus-nes), n. The state or character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; ravenousness; voracity.

This necessarily puts the good man upon making great ravages on all the dishes . . . near him, and distinguishing himself by a voraciousness of appetite, as knowing that his time is short.

Addison, Tatler, No. 255.

voracity (vô-ras'i-ti), n. [< F. voracité = Sp. voracidad = Pg. voracidade = It. voracità, < L. voracitas, ravenousness, < vorax (vorac-), devouring: see voracious.] The character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

He ate food with what might almost be termed voracity.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vii.

—Syn. Avidity, ravenousness. See rapacious.

voraginous (vô-raj'i-nus), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. voraginoso, < L. voraginosus, full of chasms or abysses, < L. vorago, a chasm, abyss: see vorago.] Of or pertaining to a gulf or whirlpool; hence, devouring; swallowing. [Rare.]

A cavern's jaws voraginous and vast.

Mallet, Anyntor and Theodora, i.

vorago (vô-râ'gô), n. [L., a gulf, abyss, < vorare, swallow, swallow up. Cf. E. swallow, a gulf, abyss; cf. also gorge in similar sense.] A gulf; an abyss. [Rare.]

From hence we passed by the place into which Curtius precipitated himself for the love of his country, now without any signs of a lake or vorago.

Keelyn, Diary, Nov. 4, 1644.

vorant (vô-rant), a. [< L. vorant(-is), pp. of vorare, swallow: see voracious.] In her-, devouring or swallowing: noting a serpent or other creature of prey. The epithet is followed by the name of the object which is being swallowed: as, the arms of Visconti of Milan were a serpent vorant a child.

vormela, n. See comela.

-vorous. [L. -vorus, < vorare, devour: see voracious, vorant.] The terminal element, meaning 'eating,' of various compound adjectives, as carnivorous, herbivorous, insectivorous, omnivorous, piscivorous, etc.

vortex (vôr'teks), n.; pl. vortices or vortexes (vôr'ti-séz, vôr'tek-séz). [= Sp. vórtice = Pg. It. vortice, < L. vortex, var. vertex, a whirl, eddy, whirlpool, vortex: see vertex, another form of the word.] 1. A whirl of fluid. An intuitive geometrical idea of the motion is not easily attained. If the motion of a fluid varies continuously both in time and in space, it may be described as such that each spherical particle is at each instant receiving three compressions or elongations at right angles to one another, and has, besides, a motion of translation and a motion of rotation about an axis through it. When this motion of rotation is present, the fluid is said to have a rotational motion; but this must not be confounded with a rotation of the whole mass. Thus, if all the parts of the fluid move in one direction but with unequal velocities in different parallel planes, though there be no rotation of the whole mass, yet the motion is rotational; and if a spherical particle were suddenly congealed, its inertia would make it rotate. On the other hand, one or more radial paddles turning about the axis of a cylindrical vessel filled with a perfect fluid, though making the latter revolve as a whole, could yet impart no rotational motion, which the fluid would evade by slipping round between the paddles. The motion being perfectly continuous, the axis of rotation of a particle must join the axis of rotation of a neighboring particle, so that a curve, called a vortex-line, may be described whose tangents are the axes of rotation of the particles at their points of tangency; and such a curve must evidently return into itself or reach both extremities to the boundaries of the fluid. A vortex is a portion of fluid in rotational motion inclosed in an annular surface which is a locus of vortex-lines; and an infinitesimal vortex is called a vortex-filament. If at any part of a vortex-filament the angular velocity is greater than at another part a little removed along the vortex-line, then (considering a particle a little removed from the central vortex-line) it is plain that of two opposite parts of this particle having the same velocity in magnitude and direction and consequently on its axis of rotation, that one which is in the more rapidly moving stratum must be nearer the central vortex-line, so that the annular boundary of the vortex must present a constriction where the angular velocity is great; and thus it can be shown that the product of the mean angular velocity in any cross-section perpendicular to the vortex-lines multiplied by the area of that section is constant at all parts of the vortex. In a perfect fluid, which can sustain no distorting stress even for an instant, the velocity of a rotating particle cannot be retarded any more than if it were a frictionless sphere; and, in like manner, no such velocity can be increased. Consequently, a vortex, unlike a wave, continues to be composed of the same identical matter. When the motion is continuous throughout the fluid, two vortices exercise a singular action upon one another, each ring in turn contracting and passing through the aperture of the other, which stretches, with other singular motions.

2. Any whirling or gyratory motion; also, a whirlpool.

He soon found himself absorbed in the same vortex of worldly passions and interests from which he had been so anxious to escape. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 5.

3. In the Cartesian philosophy, a collection of material particles, forming a fluid or ether, endowed with a rapid rotatory motion about an axis, and filling all space, by which Descartes accounted for the motions of the universe. This theory attracted much attention at one time, but is now entirely discredited.—3. [cap.] [NL.] In coil., the typical genus of Vorticidae, containing such species as V. viridis.—Electrolytic vortices, currents circulating round closed paths in the liquid or liquid and plate, but not passing through the external circuit. In an electrolytic cell.—Vortex of the heart, the peculiar spiral concentration of the fibers at the apex, produced by the twisting of the external fibers as they pass back to join those of the inner layer. Also called whirl of the heart.—Vortex-ring, in physics, a vortical molecular filament or column returning into itself so as to form a ring composed of a number of small rotating circles placed side by side, like beads on a string, as the singular smoke-rings which are sometimes produced when a cannon is fired, or when a smoker skillfully emits a puff of tobacco-smoke. Recent labors in the theoretical investigation of the motion of vortices, more particularly the theorems relating to vortex-filaments rotating round a central axis in a frictionless or perfect fluid (vortex-atoms), have suggested the possibility of founding on them a new form of the atomic theory.—Vortex theory, the theory that atoms of ordinary matter are vortices in a fluid. The object of the hypothesis seems to be to explain away action at a distance—a proceeding hardly in harmony with the theory of energy.—Vortices lentis, star-like figures seen on the surface of the crystalline lens of the eye.

vortex-filament (vôr'teks-fil'a-ment), n. In hydrodynamics, the portion of fluid included within a vortex-tube.

vortex-motion (vôr'teks-mô'shon), n. A rotational motion of a fluid in which there is circulation about certain vortex-filaments, and no circulation except about them.

vortex-tube (vôr'teks-tûb), n. An imaginary tube within a fluid whose surface is the locus of vortex-lines through a small closed curve drawn arbitrarily.

vortex-wheel (vôr'teks-hwêl), n. A turbine.

vortical (vôr'ti-kal), a. and n. [< vortex (vortic-), vortex, + -al.] 1. a. Causing a vortex, as an infusorian.

II. n. Any ciliate infusorian which makes a vortex.

vortically (vôr'ti-kal-i), adv. In a vortical manner; whirlingly.

vorticel, vorticell (vôr'ti-sel), n. [< NL. Vorticella.] An infusorian animalcule of the family Vorticellidae; a bell-animalcule.

Vorticella (vôr'ti-sel'li), n. [NL. (O. F. Müller, 1773 or 1786, but existent in form for more than a century before), dim. of L. vortex, a whirl: see vortex.] The typical genus of Vorticellidae, having a retractile pedicel; the bell-animalcules. Many species are colonial inhabitants of both salt and fresh water: they are very numerous, and among the most elegant animalcules, like tiny transparent wine-glasses or bells borne on fine elastic stems, and continually waving about in the most graceful manner, "as if they were ringing chimes for Undines to dance." V. convallaria was described by Loeuwenhoek in 1675 as an "animalcule of the first size," and called by Linnaeus Hydra con- vallaria in 1758. It occurs in stagnant water and in infusions. See also cut under Infusoria.

Vorticellidae (vôr'ti-sel'i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -idae.] Vorticels or bell-animalcules, that family of peritrichous ciliate infusorians which are sedentary or attached (the animalcules of all the other families of Peritricha being free-swimming). These animalcules are campanulate, ovate, or subcylindrical, with eccentric terminal mouth having a spiral fringe of adoral cilia, the right limb of which descends into the mouth, while the left wreathes about a movable ciliate disk; they rarely if ever have trichocysts, but usually a long, slender vestibular seta. The family is one of the largest and most easily recognizable among infusorians, the oral structures being very characteristic. The little creatures inhabit both salt and fresh water. Some are naked, constituting the Vorticellinae; others live in hard (Vaginocollinae) or soft (Ophrydiinae) loricae or investing sheaths. There are several genera and numerous species. See Carosonium, and cuts under Epistylis, Infusoria, and Vorticella.

vorticellidan (vôr'ti-sel'i-dan), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellidae; vorticelline in a broad sense.

II. n. A bell-animalcule; any vorticel.

Vorticellinae (vôr'ti-sel'i-nê), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -inae.] In a strict sense, a subfamily of Vorticellidae, containing only the naked vorticels, solitary or social, and sessile or pedicellate. This definition excludes the Vaginocollinae and Ophrydiinae, which are not naked.

vorticelline (vôr'ti-sel'in), a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellinae.

vortices, n. Latin plural of vortex.

vorticial (vôr'tish'al), a. An erroneous form of vortical.

Cyclic and seemingly gyrating or vorticial movements. Poe, Eureka.

Vorticidae (vôr'tis'i-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Vortex (-tic-) + -idae.] A family of rhabdocelous turbellarians, typified by the genus Vortex, containing both fresh-water and marine forms, some of which are parasitic on gastropods and holothurians.

vorticose (vôr'ti-kôs), a. [< L. vortex (vortic-), a whirl, vortex, + -ose.] 1. Whirling; vortical.

Only a very small percentage of the spots show any trace of vorticose motion. C. A. Young, The Sun, p. 178.

2. In anat., specifying the veins of the external layer of the choroid coat of the eyeball, the veins vorticosae, which are regularly arranged in drooping branches converging to a few equidistant trunks which perforate the sclerotic coat and empty into the ophthalmic vein.

vorticular (vôr'tik'ü-lär), a. Same as vorticose.

They [storms] possess truly vorticular motion. The Atlantic, LXVIII. 68.

vortiginous (vôr'tij'i-nus), a. [*< L. vortiginosus, assumed var. of vertiginosus, < vertigo, a whirling: see vertiginous.] Having a motion round a center or axis; vortical.

The fix'd and rooted earth,
Torn into billows, heaves and swells,
Or with vortiginous and hideous whirl
Sucks down its prey insatiably.

Cowper, Task, II. 102.

votable (vôr'ta-bl), a. [< vote + -able.] Capable of voting; having a right to vote. [Rare.]

When "the votable inhabitance convened in His Majesty's name September 24, 1754."
Town Records of Wareham, Mass., quoted in New Princeton Rev., IV. 263.

votal (vôr'tal), a. [< L. votum, a vow, + -al.] Pertaining to a vow or promise; consisting in or involving a promise. [Rare.]

Debt is not deadly sin when a man hath no means, but when he hath no meaning to pay. There must be votal restitution, if there cannot be actual.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 145.

votaress (vôr'ta-res), n. [< votar-y + -ess.] A female votary.

His woeful queen we leave at Ephesus, Unto Diana there a votaress.

Shak., Pericles, Prol., iv.

votarist (vôr'ta-ris-t), n. [< votar-y + -ist.] A votary.

The votarists of Saint Clare. Shak., M. for M., I. 4. 5.

Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed.

Milton, Comus, I. 189.

votary (vôr'ta-ri), a. and n. [*< NL. votarius, < L. votum, a vow: see vote, vow.] I. a. Consecrated by a vow or promise; also, consequent on a vow; devoted; votive.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood.

Bacon, Custom and Education (ed. 1887), p. 397.

II. n.; pl. votaries (-riz). One who is devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence, more generally, one who is devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Already Love's firm votary. Shak., T. G. of V., III. 2. 53.

Votaries of business and of pleasure prove Faithless alike in friendship and in love.

Cowper, Verses from Valediction.

He deemed that a faith which taught that Jupiter of the Capitol was a thing of naught was a faith which became his votary to root out from all the lands that bowed to Jove and to Jovius. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 139.

Music and painting and sculpture could also boast of distinguished votaries under the Regency.

The Academy, Oct. 25, 1880, p. 360.

vote (vôt), n. [< F. vote, a vote, = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, wish, vote, < L. votum, a promise, wish, an engagement, < vovare, pp. votus, promise, dedicate, vow, wish: see vow.] 1. An ardent wish or desire; a prayer; a vow.

All the heavens consent
With harmony to tune their notes,
In answer to the public votes,
That for it up were sent.

B. Jonson, Fortunate Isles.

Iol. The end of my Devotions is that one and the same hour
May make us fit for heaven.

See. I join with you
In my votes that way. Mansinger, Guardian, v. 1.

Those interchangeable votes of priest and people, . . .
"O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake!"
O God, we have heard with our ears, &c.

Prudeauz, Euchologia, p. 236.

2. A suffrage; the formal expression of a will, preference, wish, or choice in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a person to fill a certain situation or office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, etc. This vote or choice may be expressed by holding up the hand, by standing up, by the voice (visa voce), by ballot, or otherwise.

Each party gaped, and looked alternately for their vote almost to the end of their speeches.

Burke, American Taxation.

He . . . was already a forty-shilling freeholder, and was conscious of a vote for the county.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

Hence—3. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections; a ballot, a ticket, etc.: as, a written vote.

The freeman, casting with unpurchased hand
The vote that shakes the turrets of the land.

O. W. Holmes, Poetry, A Metrical Essay.

4. That which is allowed, conveyed, or bestowed by the will of a majority; a thing conferred by vote; a grant; as, the ministry received a vote of confidence; the vote for the civil service amounted to $24,000,000.—5. Expression of will by a majority; decision by some expression of the minds of a number; result of voting; as, the vote was unanimous; the vote was close.—6. Votes collectively: as, a movement to capture the labor vote.—Casting vote. See casting-vote.—Cumulative vote. See cumulative system of voting, under cumulative.—Limited vote, a form of voting by which the elector is restricted to a less number of votes than there are vacancies, as in the case of a three-cornered constituency (which see, under three-cornered).—Straw vote. See straw.—The floating vote. See floating.—To split one's votes. See split.

vote (vôt), v.; pret. and pp. voted, ppr. voting. [< F. voter, vote, < vote, vote: see vote, n.] I. intrans. To give a vote; formally to express or signify the mind, will, or choice in electing persons to office, or in passing laws, regulations, and the like, or in deciding as to any measure in which one has an interest in common with others.

They voted then to do a deed
As kirkmen to devise.

Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 221).

For their want of intimate knowledge of affairs, I do not think this ought to disqualify them [women] from voting at any town-meeting which I ever attended.

Emerson, Woman.

Cumulative system of voting. See cumulative.—To vote straight, to vote the entire ticket, as of a political party, without scratching. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To enact or establish by vote, as a resolution or an amendment.—2. To grant by vote, as an appropriation.

Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds.

Swift.

3. To declare by general consent; characterize by expression of opinion: as, they voted the trip a failure. [Colloq.]

It has come to be voted rather a vulgar thing to be married by banns at all.

Daily Telegraph, March 20, 1888. (Encyc. Diet.)

To vote down, to defeat (a proposition), as in a legislative body; give public judgment against; hence, to put an end to.

Old truths voted down begin to resume their places.

Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., II. 5.

Vorticella nebulifera, highly magnified.
a, circle of cilia borne upon the disk; b, peristome; c, esophagus; d, contractile vacuole; e, one of several food-vacuoles; f, nucleus; g, endosarc; h, ectosarc; i, infundibuliform beginning of the muscular stem, most of the length of which is omitted.

It is of no use to vote down gravitation or morals.

Emerson, Fugitive Slave Law.

To vote in, to choose by suffrage; elect, as to an appointment or office, by expression of will or preference: as, he was voted in by a handsome majority.

voteless (vō'tlēs), a. [< vote + -less.] Having no vote; not entitled to a vote.

He was not enlightened enough to know that there was a way of using voteless miners and navvies at Nominations and Elections.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

voter (vō'tēr), n. [< vote + -er.] One who votes or has a legal right to vote; an elector.

Of late years . . . when it has been considered necessary by politicians to cultivate the foreign-born voters, there has been a great tendency to appoint naturalized citizens as consuls.
Schuyler, Amer. Diplomacy, p. 81.

Registration of voters. See registration.

vote-recorder (vō't-rē-kōr'dēr), n. An electrical device which records the yes or nay of a voter when the corresponding knob or button is pressed.

voting-paper (vō'ting-pā'pēr), n. A balloting-paper; particularly, according to the British Ballot Act of 1872, a paper used in voting by ballot in the election of members of Parliament, of municipal corporations, etc. Such papers are used only in cases where the number of candidates exceeds the number of vacancies; they contain a list of the candidates, and the voter is required to put a mark opposite the name of each candidate he selects.

votist (vō'tist), n. [< L. votum, vow + -ist.] One who makes a vow; a vower; a votarist.

Try
If a poor woman, votist of revenge,
Would not perform it.

Chapman, Revenge of Bussey D'Ambols, III. 1.

votive (vō'tiv), a. [< F. votif = Sp. Pg. It. votivo, < L. votivus, of or pertaining to a vow, conformable to one's wish, < votum, vow: see vote, vow.] 1. Offered, contributed, or consecrated in accordance with a vow: as, a votive picture.

Not gold, not blood, their altar dowers,
But votive tears and symbol flowers.

Shelley, Hellas.

We set to-day a votive stone,
That memory may their dead redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.

Emerson, Concord Monument.

Votive tablets commemorative of cures and deliverance were hung around.

C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 232.

2. Observed, practised, or done in consequence of a vow. [Rare.]

Votive abstinence some cold constitutions may endure.
Feltham, Resolves, I. 85.

Diversions of this kind have a practical value, even though they seem to be those of a knight tilting at a way-side tournament as he rides on his votive quest.

Sedgman, Vict. Poets, p. 390.

Votive mass. See mass.—Votive offering, a tablet, picture, or the like dedicated in fulfillment of the vow (Latin ex voto) of a worshiper. Among the Greeks and Romans such offerings were dedicated to deities or heroes, and were affixed to the walls of temples, or set up in consecrated places, often in niches cut in the rock in a locality reputed sacred. Among Roman Catholics they are usually set up in chapels dedicated to the Virgin or to a saint.

votively (vō'tiv-lī), adv. In a votive manner; by vow.

votiveness (vō'tiv-nes), n. The state or character of being votive.

votress (vō'tres), n. Same as votress.

vouch (vouch), v. [< ME. vouchen, vouchen, < OF. voucher, voucher, < L. vocare, call, call upon, summon: see vocation, voice. Cf. vouchsafe, avouch.] I. trans. 1†. To call to witness.

And vouch the silent stars, and conscious moon.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xlii. 22.

2. To declare; assert; affirm; attest; avouch. Praised therefore be his name, which voucheth us worthy this honour.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 176.

What can you vouch against him, Signior Lucio?
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 326.

What we have done
None shall dare vouch, though it be truly known.
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, ix. 31.

3. To warrant; be surety for; answer for; make good; confirm.

Go tell the lords o' the city I am here;
Deliver them this paper; having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place, where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
Will vouch the truth of it.

Shak., Cor., v. 6. 5.

When I arrived at Scutari, they took my slave from me, as I had not the original writing by me to vouch the property of him. Pococke, Description of the East, II. II. 126.

4. To support; back; second; follow up. [Rare.]

Bold words vouch'd with a deed so bold.

Milton, P. L., v. 66.

5. In law: (a) To produce vouchers for, in support of a charge in account. (b) In old Eng. law, to call or summon into court to warrant and defend, or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee.
Blackstone, Com., II. xxi.

=Syn. 2. To asseverate, aver, protest.

II. intrans. To bear witness; give testimony or attestation; more specifically, in old Eng. law, to call in some one to make good his alleged warranty of title; be surety or guaranty.

Vouch with me, heaven.
Shak., Othello, I. 3. 262.

The Salvo of Sir John Friendly's appearing at last, and vouching for Lord Poplington, won't mend the matter.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 215.

A very clear account, upon my word; and I dare swear the lady will vouch for every article of it.

Sheridan, School for Scandal, IV. 3.

To vouch to warranty, in old Eng. law, to call in a third person as a substituted defendant, to defend the title acquired from him. = Syn. Of vouch for, warrant, assure, guarantee.

vouch (vouch), n. [< vouch, v.] Approving or supporting warrant; confirmation; attestation.

Why in this woolvish toge should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouchers?

Shak., Cor., II. 3. 124.

vouches (vou-chē'), n. [< vouch + -er.] In law, the person who is vouched or summoned in a writ of right.

All trouble on this score was avoided by choosing as vouches some one who notoriously had no lands to make recompense withal, and therefore was, as we now say, not worth powder and shot.
F. Pollock, Land Laws, p. 81.

voucher (vou'chēr), n. [< vouch + -er.] 1. One who vouches, or gives attestation or confirmation; one who is surety for another.

He knows his own strength so well that he never dares praise anything in which he has not a French author for his voucher.
Addison, Tatler, No. 165.

Some banks will not take the accounts of persons introduced only by their own clerks, for fear they might be confederates in some scheme of fraud or plunder. Other and responsible vouchers are required.
Harper's Mag., LXXX. 468.

2. A book, paper, document, or stamp which serves to prove the truth of accounts, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind; specifically, a receipt or other written evidence of the payment of money.

The stamp is a mark . . . and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight.

Locke, Further Considerations concerning Raising the (Value of Money).

He caused the accounts to be examined by the proper officer, who, after comparing every article with its voucher, certified them to be right.
Franklin, Autobiog., p. 200.

3. In old Eng. law: (a) The tenant in a writ of right; one who called in another to establish his warranty of title. In common recoveries there might be a single voucher or double vouchers. [Also written vouchor.] (b) The calling in of a person to vouch.—Double voucher, an incident in the alienation of land by the fiction of common recovery, where the owner was allowed to convey to a third person who, being sued, alleged that the former warranted the title, and he, being called to vouch for it, was allowed to allege that still another warranted it to him, the object being to bar contingent interests, etc.

vouchment (vouch'mēt), n. [< vouch + -ment.] A declaration or affirmation; a solemn assertion.

Their vouchment by their honour in that trial is not an oath.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, I. 77. (Davies.)

vouchor (vou'chor), n. [< vouch + -or.] See voucher, 3 (a).

vouchsafe (vouch-sāf'), v.; pret. and pp. vouchsafed, ppr. vouchsafing. [< ME. vouchen safe, saf, sauf, prop. two words, lit. 'guarantee (as) safe'; < vouch + safe.] I. trans. 1†. To guarantee as safe; secure; assure.

That the queen be of-sent, sauf wol i fouché
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), I. 4152.

So Philip is wild, on that wise we it take
As go haf mad present, the kynge vouches it saue.

Rob. of Brunne, p. 200. (Richardson.)

2. To permit, grant, or bestow: sometimes with implied condescension: as, not to vouchsafe an answer.

I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.
Shak., Cymbeline, II. 3. 45.

In your pardon, and the kias vouchsafed me,
You did but point me out a fore-right way
To lead to certain happiness.

Massinger, Parliament of Love, III. 3.

Sir, I must thank you for the Visit you vouchsafed me in this simple Cell.
Howell, Letters, II. 69.

3†. To receive or accept by way of condescension.

There she sate, vouchsafing my cloak (then most gorgeous) under her.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, I.

Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafest them. Shak., K. John, III. 1. 294.

II. intrans. To permit; grant; condescend; deign; stoop.

Than he preyed devoutly to God, that he wolde vouchsafe to suffre him gun up.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 149.

God vouchsafed sauf through thee with us to accorde.

Chaucer, A. B. C., I. 27.

Vouchsafe, noble Lady, to accept this simple remembrance.
Spenser, Tears of the Muses, Ded.

vouchsafement (vouch-sāf'mēt), n. [< vouchsafe + -ment.] The act of vouchsafing, or that which is vouchsafed; a gift or grant in condescension. [Rare.]

Peculiar experiences being such vouchsafements to them, which God communicated to none but his chosen people.

Stillington, Sermons, I. viii.

voudou, voodooism. See roodoo, voodooism.

vouge (vōzh), n. Same as voulge.

vough, n. Same as vug.

voulge (vōzh), n. [< OF.

voulge, vouge, voonge, F. vouge

(ML. vanga), a hunting-spear.

a lance; origin unknown.] A weapon consisting of a blade fitted on a long handle or staff, used by the foot-soldiers of the fourteenth century and later.

It varied in form, resembling sometimes the fauchard, sometimes the war-acythe, sometimes the halberd, and was frequently like an ax the blade of which, with but slight projection, has great length in the direction of the staff, and is finished at the end in a sharp point.

voundt, a. An unexplained word, perhaps a mistake for round, occurring in the following passage:

Though it were of no rounde stone,
Wrought with squyre and scantillone.

Rom. of the Rose, I. 7063.

vourt, v. t. [ME. vourer, < OF.

vourer, vorer*, < L. vorare, devour; eat; cf. voracious, devour.] To devour.

Thel whom the sward deuowrede [var. vorrede].

Wyclif, 2 Ki. [2 Sam.] xviii. 8.

vourer, n. A devourer.

Lo! a man deuourere, ether glotoun [var. vourer or glotoun].
Wyclif, Luke vii. 34.

vousoir (vō-swōr'), n. [F.; cf. voussure, the curvature of a vault, prop. < vousser*, < LL. as if volutare*, make round, < L. volutus, a rolling, < volvare, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] In arch., a stone in the shape of a truncated wedge, which forms part of an arch. The under sides of the vousoirs form the intrados or soffit of the arch, and the upper sides the extrados. The middle vousoir is often termed the keystone. See arch, 2.

vousoir (vō-swōr'), v. t. [< vousoir, n.] To form with vousoirs; construct by means of vousoirs. Encyc. Brit., II. 387.

vouter, n. An obsolete form of vault†.

voutret, voutur, n. Obsolete forms of vulture.

vow (vou), n. [< ME. vow, < OF. vou, vo, veu, F. vau = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, < L. votum, a promise, dedication, vow, < vorere, promise, vow: see vote, n., of which vow is a doublet.] 1. A solemn promise; an engagement solemnly entered into. Specifically—(a) A kind of promissory oath made to God, or to some deity, to perform some act or dedicate to the deity something of value, often in the event of receiving something specially desired, such as success in an enterprise, deliverance from danger, or recovery from sickness: as, a vow to build an altar.

Would I were even the saint they make their vows to!
How easily I would grant!
Fletcher, Pilgrim, I. 2.

Forc'd Consecrations out of another mans Estate are no better than forc'd Vows, hateful to God who loves a cheerful giver.
Milton, Touching Hirelings.

A vow is a deliberate promise made to God in regard to something possessing superior goodness. To be valid, it must proceed from the free, deliberate will of one who, by age and social position, is capable of contracting a solemn obligation. It is to God alone that a vow is taken, and . . . it is an act of religion, or of divine worship. To vow to a saint means, in the minds of Catholics, to vow to God in honour of a saint.
Ronn. Cath. Dict.

(b) A promise to follow out some line of conduct, or to consecrate or devote one's self wholly or in part for a longer or shorter time to some act or service; a pledge of fidelity or constancy: as, a marriage vow.

Foibles therefore

They are which fortunes doe by vowes devise,
With each unto himselfe his life may fortuneize.

Spenser, F. Q., VI. ix. 30.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.

Shak., M. N. D., I. 1. 175.

But, for performance of your vow, I entreat
Some grace from you.

Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, II. 1.

2†. A solemn asseveration or declaration; a positive assertion.

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., III. 2. 159.

3†. A votive offering; an ex-voto.

Belonging to this church is a world of plate, some whole statues of it, and lamps innumerable, besides the costly stones hung up, some of gold, and a cabinet of precious stones. Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

Baptismal vows. See baptismal. — Monastic vows.
See monastic.

Vow (vou'), v. [< ME. voven, < OF. vover, vover, F. vover = Sp. Pg. votar = It. votare, promise, vow, vote, < ML. votare, promise, vow, < L. votum, promise, vow: see vow, n. Cf. vote, v.] I. intrans. 1. To promise solemnly; undertake, by a solemn promise, as to God or a deity, to do, perform, or give; devote.

And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, . . . then shall the Lord be my God: . . . and of all that thou shalt give me
I will surely give the tenth unto thee. Gen. xxviii. 20-22.

My own good master Harvey, to whom I have, both in respect of your worthiness generally and otherways upon some particular and special considerations, vowed this my labour Spencer, To Gabriell Harvey.

By Mahomet
The Turk there vows, on his blest Alcoran, Marriage unto her.

Beau. and FL., Knight of Malta, I. 1.

I vow and I swear, by the fan in my hand,
That my lord shall ne maid come near me.
 The Gypsy Laddie (Child's Ballads, IV. 117).

2. To threaten solemnly or upon oath.

Weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance.
 Shak., T. and C., v. 5. 31.

3. To assert or maintain solemnly; asseverate; swear.

He heard him swear and vow to God
He came but to be duke of Lancaster.
 Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 60.

Brisk. I vow it is a pleasurable Morning: the Waters taste so finely after being fuddled last Night. Neighbour Fribbler, here's a Pint to you.

Frib. I'll pledge you, Mrs. Briskot: I have drunk eight already.

Sir Peter vows he has not his equal in England; and, above all, he praises him as a man of sentiment.

Sheridan, School for Scandal, I. 1.

It was my first experience with camels, and I vowed that it should be my last; for, taking them altogether, they are the most tiresome and troublesome animals I have ever seen. The Century, XLI. 351.

II. intrans. To make vows or solemn promises; protest solemnly; asseverate; declare emphatically.

Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay. Eccl. v. 6.

vow-breach (vou'bréch), n. The breaking of a vow.

He that vows . . . never to commit an error hath taken a course that his little infirmities shall become crimes, and certainly be imputed, by changing his unavoidable infirmity into vow-breach.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 692.

vow-break (vou'bräk), n. Same as vow-breach.

vow-breaker (vou'brä'kér), n. One who breaks his vow or vows.

And this is that holy bishop Paphnutius, whom these evangelical vow-breakers pretend to be their protector for their unlawful marriages.

M. Harding, quoted in Bp. Jewell's Works (Parker Soc.), III. 386.

vowel (vou'el), n. and a. [Formerly also vowel;
< F. voyelle = Sp. Pg. vocal = It. vocale, a vowel, < L. vocalis, a vowel, fem. (sc. littera, letter) of vocalis, sounding, sonorous, < vox (voc-), voice, sound: see voice, vocal.] I. n. 1. One of the openest, most resonant, and continuable sounds uttered by the voice in the process of speaking; a sound in which the element of tone, though modified and differentiated by positions of the mouth-organs, is predominant; a tone-sound, as distinguished from a fricative (in which a rustling between closely approximated organs is the predominant element), from a mute (in which the explosion of a closure is characteristic), and so on. Vowel and consonant are relative terms, distinguishing respectively the opener and closer utterances; but there is no absolute division between them.
Certain sounds are so open as to be only vowels; certain others so close as to be only consonants; but there are yet others which have the value now of vowels and now of consonants. Thus, i and u have frequently vowel-value in English, as in apple, taken; and r is in various languages a much-used vowel. Also, the semi-vowels y and w are not appreciably different from the i-vowel (of pyque) and the u-vowel (of rule) respectively. A sound, namely, a, is a vowel if it forms the central or open element of a syllable, being a syllable either alone or in conjunction with the closer sounds (consonants) that accompany it. (See syllable.) The openest of the vowels is a (as in far, father); the closest are i and u (in pyque, rule); and these three, with e and o (as in they, tone), intermediate respectively between a and i and a and u, are hardly wanting in any known human language. But many others are found in various languages, and their number is theoretically unlimited.

2. The letter or character which represents such a sound. — Neutral vowel. See neutral.

II. a. Pertaining to a vowel; vocal. — Vowel points. See point.

vowel (vou'el), v. t.; pret. and pp. voweled, vow-elled, ppr. voweling, vowelling. [< vowel, n.] To provide or complete with vowels; insert vowels in (a word or syllable).

With pauses, cadence, and well-vowelled words.

Dryden, To Roscommon.
The vowelling of Greek and Latin proper names shews that the vagueness of the vowels was not absolute.

Encyc. Brit., XI. 797.

vowelish (vou'el-ish), a. [< vowel + -ish.] (Of the nature of a vowel. B. Jonson, Eng. Grammar, I. 3.

vowelism (vou'el-izm), n. [< vowel + -ism.] The use of vowels.

vowelist (vou'el-ist), n. [< vowel + -ist.] One who is addicted to vowelism.

As a repetitious vowelist, Mr. — is virtuous compared with Milton. Athenaeum, No. 3280, p. 384.

vowelize (vou'el-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. vowelized, ppr. vowelizing. [< vowel + -ize.] To insert vowel-signs in, as in Semitic words or shorthand forms written primarily with consonants only.

"Tom Brown's School-Days" will be immediately issued in the easy reporting style (of shorthand), fully vowelized.
 The American, VI. 514.

vowelless (vou'el-less), a. [< vowel + -less.] Without a vowel or vowels.

Hebrew, with its vowel-less roots, which require vocalization before they can attain any meaning.

Farrar, Language and Languages, p. 395.

vowelly (vou'el-i), a. [< vowel + -ly.] Abounding in vowels; characterized by vowel-sounds.

The mellifluous and flexibility of the vowelly language (Italian) were favorable to unrhymed verse.
 I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I. 349.

vower (vou'ér), n. [< vow + -er.] One who makes a vow.

These prycke eared prynces myghte truste those vowers, as hawkes made to theyr handes, yet wolde I counsell the christen prynces in no wyse to trust them.

Bp. Bale, Apology, fol. 142.

vowess (vou'és), n. [< vow + -ess.] A woman who has taken a vow; a nun. [Rare.]

In that church also lieth this ladie, buried . . . in the habit of a vowess.

Harrison, Descrip. of Eng., II. 3 (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

vow-fellow (vou'fel'ô), n. One who is bound by the same vow. [Rare.]

Vow-fellows with this virtuous duke.

vowless (vou'les), a. [< vow + -less.] Without a vow; not bound by a vow.

He hath done with their own vows, and now descends to us, whom he confesses vowless.

Bp. Hall, Honour of Married Clergy, I. 17.

vowsont, n. Same as adwoson.

The soyd William was with the prior of Norwiche of counseille in hese trewe defence ageyn the entent of the seyd Walter in a sute that he made ageyn the seydr priour of a vowsont of the chyrche of Sprouston in the counte of Norfolk. Paston Letters, I. 18.

VOX (voks), n. [L.: see voice.] Voice; in music, a voice or voice-part. — Vox angelica, in organ-building, a stop having two pipes to each digital, one of which is tuned slightly sharp, so that by their dissonance a wavy effect is produced. The pipes are of narrow scale, and the tone is delicate. Also vox celestis, vinda maris, etc.

— Vox antecedens, the theme or antecedent of a canon or fugue. — Vox barbara, a barbarous or outlandish word or phrase: commonly used, in zoology and botany, of those terms which are ostensibly New Latin, but which are neither Latin nor Greek, nor of classic derivation and formation, or are hybrids between Latin and Greek. Some thousands of such words are current, though rejected by some purists; and their use is far less objectionable than the unending confusion in nomenclature which attends the attempt to discard them. (See synonym, 2 (b).) Usually abbreviated vox barb. — Vox celestis. Same as vox angelica. — Vox consequens, the answer or consequent of a canon or fugue. — Vox humana, in organ-building, a reed-stop having short capped pipes, so constructed as to reinforce the higher harmonies of the fundamental tones, and thus to produce tones more or less resembling those of the human voice. The imitation is not close, but under suitable conditions the illusion of a distant singer or choir is possible. The tremulant is usually combined with the vox humana. A stop of the same name, but of much less effectiveness, is often placed in reed-organs. — Vox quinta. Same as quinta.

voyage (voi'áj), n. [Early mod. E. also voiage;
*< ME. voyage, voiage, veiage, veage, viage, voyage, of which voyage is a doublet.] 1. Formerly, a passage or journey by land or by sea; now only a journey or passage by sea or water from one place, port, or country to another, especially a passing or journey by water to a distant place or country: as, a voyage to India.

It is long time passed that ther was no generale Passage ne Vyage over the See; and many Men desirous for to fardle of books.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II. 7.

Provided also that no person or persons having charge of any Vyage, in passage from the Realme of Ireland or from the Isle of Manne into this Realme of England, do from the laste dayes of June next comynge wittingly or willingly transporte . . . any Vacabond Roge or Beggar.
 Laws of 14 Eliz. (1573), quoted in Ribton-Turner's [Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 109.]

The pasha was lately returned from his voyage towards Mecca, it being his office always to set out with provisions to meet the caravan in its return: they go about half way to Mecca, setting out the same day that the caravan usually leaves Mecca.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. 1. 101.

All being embarked, they bade farewell to the gazing throng upon the beach, who continued shouting after them,
. . . wishing them a happy voyage.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 110.

2. pl. A book of voyages: used like travels. —
3†. The practice of traveling.

Nations have interknowledge of one another by voyage into foreign parts. Bacon.

4†. A way or course taken; an attempt or undertaking; an enterprise; an expedition.

And ek Diane! I the blaske

That this viage be noight to the loth.

Chaucer, Troilus, III. 782.

If you make your voyage upon her and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy.

Shak., Cymbeline, I. 4. 170.

He ran away from me, . . . and pretended he would go the Island voyage [that against Hispaniola]; since, I ne'er heard of him till within this fortnight.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, II. 2.

So great a dignity in time past was not obtained to the masters ther of by rebellion, . . . but by fighting valiantly with the Moors in the voyage of Granado.

Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 261.

Broken voyage. See broken. — Continued or continuous voyage. See continued. — Dance voyage, an unsuccessful fishing-voyage. [Local, New Eng.] — Mixed voyage. See mixed. — To do voyage, to make a journey; set out on an enterprise.

=Syn. 1. Trip, Excursion, etc. (see journey), cruise, sail.

voyage (voi'áj), v.; pret. and pp. voyaged, ppr.
voyaging. [< OF. voyager, travel, < voyage, travel: see voyage.] I. intrans. To take a journey or voyage; especially, to sail or pass by water.

Beautiful bird! thou voyagest to thine home.

Shelley, Alastor.

A mind for ever

Voyaging through strange seas of Thought alone.
 Wordsworth, Prelude, III.

II. trans. To travel; pass over; traverse.

Long were to tell

What I have done, what suffer'd; with what pain

Voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep.

Milton, P. L., x. 471.

The Rhone of to-day must be something like the Rhine of fifty years ago, though much less voyaged now than that was then. The Century, XL. 636.

voyageable (voi'áj-a-bl), a. [< voyage + -able.] Capable of being sailed or traveled over; navigable.

voyager (voi'áj-ér), n. [< voyage + -er.] One who voyages; one who sails or passes by sea or water.

You go on to prefer my Captivity in this Fleet to that of a Voyager at Sea.

Howell, Letters, II. 89.

In a few short moments I retrace

(As in a map the voyager his course)

The windings of my way through many years.

Couper, Task, vi. 17.

voyageur (vwo-ya-zhér'), n. [F., < voyage, travel; as voyager.] The Canadian name of one of a class of men employed by the Northwest and Hudson's Bay companies in transporting men and supplies, and, in general, in keeping up communication between their various stations, which was done exclusively in bark canoes, the whole region formerly under the exclusive control of these companies being almost everywhere accessible by water, with few and short portages. These men were nearly always French Canadians or half-breeds.

Such was the routine of our journey, the day, generally speaking, being divided into six hours of rest and eighteen of labour. This almost incredible toil the voyageurs bore without a murmur, and generally with such a hilarity of spirit as few other men could sustain for a single forenoon.

Gov. Simpson, Journey Round the World, I. 22.

voyaging (voi'aj-ing), n. [Verbal n. of voyage, v.] The act or process of taking a voyage; a journey by water.

It is, in fact, a diary of the voyagings and residences of the ambassadors of Henry the Third.

Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 184.

voyalt, n. Same as violt, 2.

V. P. An abbreviation of vice-president.

V-point (və'point), n. The vertex of two or more diverging lines: as, the V-point of cirrus stripes.

vraisemblance (vrā-sōn-bloñs'), n. [F., < vrai, true, + semblance, appearance: see very and semblance, and cf. verisimilitude.] The appearance of truth; verisimilitude.

v. s. In music, an abbreviation of volti subito.

V. S. An abbreviation of veterinary surgeon.

vs. An abbreviation of versus.

V-shaped (və'shāpt), a. Shaped like the letter V; like the two equal sides of an isosceles triangle; lambdoid.—V-shaped barometric depression, a region of low barometer enclosed by one or more V-shaped isobars, the point of the V, in the northern hemisphere, being usually directed toward the south. V-shaped depressions are often accompanied by characteristic squalls, technically called line-squalls.

v. t. The abbreviation used in this work, of verb transitive.

V-threaded screw. See *screw*¹.

V-tool (vē'tōl), n. In joinery and carving, a cutting-tool having the cutting edge in two branches, making an impression like a letter V, a sort of angular gouge.

vus (vū), n. [OF., sight, view: see view.] The sight-opening of a helmet: same as œilère.

vug (vug), n. [Also vugh, vough, vooga; < Corn. vug, vugh, vugga, vooga, etc., a cave, cavern; cf. Corn. jago, jogou, jou, a cave (= W. ffau, a cave, den), Corn. hugo, googoo, ogoo, ogo (Jago), a cave, W. ogof, gogof, a cave.] In mining, a cavity; a hollow in a rock or in a lode. Vug is the miners' name for that which geologists more generally call a geode. See geode. Also called tick-hole, vooga-hole.

Quartz is very generally found lining the hollow spaces (vughs) in lodes. R. Hunt, British Mining, p. 486.

vuggy (vug'i), a. [< vug + -y.] Of the nature of a vug; containing vugs.

vuidr, n. Same as volder.

Vulcan (vul'kan), n. [= F. Vulcan = Sp. Pg. Volcano = It. Volcano, Vulcano, < L. Volcanus, Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire; cf. Skt. ukā, a firebrand. Cf. volcano.] 1. In Rom. myth., the god of fire and the working of metals, and the patron of all handicraftsmen. Originally an independent deity, he became with the advance of time completely identified with the Greek Hephaestus. He was the son of Jupiter and Juno, or of Juno alone, and was born with deformed feet, though according to late myths his lameness came from his having been hurled down from heaven by Jupiter in a fit of anger. He was the divine artist, the creator of all that was beautiful as well as of all that was mechanically wonderful in the abodes of the gods. On earth various volcanoes, as Lemnos and Etna, were held to be his workshops, and the Cyclopes were his journeyman. He had the power of conferring life upon his creations, and was thus the author of Pandora and of the golden dogs of Alcinoüs. In art he was represented as a bearded man, usually with the short sleeveless or one-sleeved tunic (exomis) of the workman, with a conical cap, holding hammer and tongs or other attributes of the smith, and sometimes with indication of his lameness. When Jupiter conceived Minerva in his head, the goddess was delivered full-armed, upon the stroke of an ax in the hands of Vulcan.

2. A hypothetical planet between the sun and the planet Mercury. An object supposed to be a planet was seen crossing the sun's disk on March 26th, 1859. The period of revolution assigned to it was something over 19 days, and its distance from the sun was estimated at about 13,000,000 miles. The existence of Vulcan, however, has not been confirmed (may, indeed, be said to have been practically disproved) by subsequent careful observations.

3†. A volcano.

Also in that Ile is the Mount Ethna, that Men clepen Mount Gybelles; and the Wiccanes, that ben evermore brennyng. Mandeville, Travels, p. 55.

Of those [remarkable things] which are in the Vulcans and mouths of fire at the Indies, worthy doubleless to be observed, I will speak in their order.

Acosta, Hist. Indies (tr. by E. Grimston, 1604), iii. 2 (Hakluyt Soc., I. 105).

Vulcan powder, an explosive consisting of nitroglycerin, sodium nitrate, sulphur, and charcoal.

Vulcanalia (vul-ka-nā'li-ä), n. pl. [L.: see Vulcan.] An ancient Roman festival in honor of Vulcan, celebrated on August 23d with games in the Flaminian circus near the temple of the god, and with sacrifices of fishes. As part of the observance on this day, work was begun by lamplight, in honor of the fire-god.

Vulcanian (vul-ka-ni-an), a. [< L. Volcanius, Vulcanius, < Volcano, Vulcanus, Vulcan, + -an.] 1. Pertaining to Vulcan, or to works in iron, etc., and occasionally (but not so used by geologists) to volcanoes or volcanic action.

A region of vulcanian activity.

R. A. Proctor, Poetry of Astronomy, p. 228.

2. In geol., pertaining to or designating the system or theory of the Vulcanists, or opponents of Werner.

Vulcanic (vul-kan'ik), a. [= F. vulcanique = Sp. volcánico = Pg. volcánico = It. volcanico; as Vulcan + -ic. Cf. volcano.] Pertaining or relating to Vulcan or to volcanoes.

Even the burning of a meeting-house, in itself a vulcanic rarity (so long as he was of another parish), could not tickle his outworn palate. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 120.

vulcanicity (vul-ka-nis'i-ti), n. [< vulcanic + -ity.] Same as vulcanicity.

This [heat-producing] power, inadequate though it may be to explain the phenomena of vulcanicity.

J. Prestwich, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 425.

The term volcanic action (vulcanism or vulcanicity) embraces all the phenomena connected with the expulsion of heated materials from the interior of the earth to the surface. Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

vulcanisable, vulcanisation, etc. See vulcanizable, etc.

vulcanism (vul'kan-izm), n. [< Vulcan + -ism.] In geol., same as volcanism. The words volcano and vulcanic are firmly fixed in English, and the former is in universal and exclusive use among those who speak that language. Hence all the derivatives should be spelled correspondingly: thus, volcanism, volcanicity, volcanology, and not vulcanism, etc.

In the lapse of ages . . . the very roots of former volcanoes have been laid bare, displaying subterranean phases of vulcanism which could not be studied in any modern volcano. Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

Vulcanist (vul'kan-ist), n. [< Vulcan + -ist.] In the early history of geological science, one who supported the Huttonian theory, or who was in opposition to the views of Werner. See Huttonian.

It is sufficient to remark that these systems are usually reduced to two classes, according as they refer the origin of terrestrial bodies to fire or water; and that, conformably to this division, their followers have of late been distinguished by the fanciful names of Vulcanists and Nephtunists. To the former of these Dr. Hutton belongs much more than to the latter; though, as he employs the agency both of fire and water in his system, he cannot, in strict propriety, be arranged with either.

Playfair, Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory

vulcanite (vul'kan-it), n. [< Vulcan + -ite.] 1. The harder of the two forms of vulcanized india-rubber, the other form being known as soft rubber. Vulcanite differs from soft rubber in that it contains more sulphur, and is cured or vulcanized at a higher temperature. It is of a brownish-black color, is hard and tough, cuts easily, and takes a good polish: it is largely used for making into combs, brooches, bracelets, and many other ornaments. It is not affected by water or by any of the other caustic solvents. As it is especially distinguished by the large quantity of electricity which it evolves when rubbed, it is much used in the construction of electric machines. Also called ebonite.

2. A name sometimes given to pyroxene, from its being found in ejected blocks and lavas.—Vulcanite flask, an iron box closed by screw-bolts, for holding an artificial denture while being vulcanized, to fix the artificial teeth in the vulcanite plate. The flask is heated in a vulcanizing furnace.

vulcanizable (vul'kan-i-zā-bl), a. [< vulcanize + -able.] Capable of being vulcanized; admitting of vulcanization. Also spelled vulcanisable.

vulcanization (vul'kan-i-zā'shon), n. [< vulcanize + -ation.] A method of treating caoutchouc or india-rubber with some form of sulphur, to effect certain changes in its properties, and yield a soft (vulcanized india-rubber) or a hard (vulcanite) product. This was originally effected by dipping the rubber in melted sulphur and heating it to nearly 300°. Several other methods have been employed, probably the best of which for general purposes consists in mechanically mixing the rubber at a moderate heat with flowers of sulphur, and subsequently "curing" it in superheated steam at from 250° to 300° Fahr. The process was invented by Charles Goodyear, who obtained his first patent for it in 1844. Other ingredients, as litharge, white lead, zinc-white, whiting, etc., are added to the sulphur to give color, softness, etc., to the rubber. The substance thus formed possesses the following properties: it remains elastic at all temperatures; it cannot be dissolved by the ordinary solvents, neither is it affected by heat within a considerable range of temperature; finally, it acquires extraordinary powers of resisting compression, with a great increase of strength and elasticity. Vulcanized india-rubber is employed with great success for very many useful purposes, as for waterproofing cloth, for boots, shoes, mats, toys, belting, buffers, wheel-tires, washers, valves, pipes, fire-hose, medical and surgical appliances, etc. Hard vulcanized rubber is known as ebonite or vulcanite. See vulcanite. Also spelled vulcanisation.

vulcanize (vul'kan-iz), v.; pret. and pp. vulcanized, ppr. vulcanizing. [= F. vulcaniser; as Vulcan (with allusion to the melted sulphur of volcanoes) + -ize.] 1. trans. To subject to the process of vulcanization, as caoutchouc.—Vulcanized fiber. See fiber.—Vulcanized glass, glass cooled by plunging into a bath having a comparatively high temperature. The nature of the bath depends upon the effect desired to be produced.—Vulcanized rubber, caoutchouc incorporated with sulphur and subjected to heat, whereby it combines chemically with the sulphur, and assumes, when cold, a hard consistency resembling that of horn.

II. intrans. To admit of vulcanization.

Rubber vulcanizes at 276° Fahr.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LXII. 140.

Also spelled vulcanise.

vulcanizer (vul'kan-i-zēr), n. [< vulcanize + -er.] Apparatus used in vulcanizing india-rubber. Also spelled vulcaniser.

vulcanot, n. An old form of volcano.

Amer. Jour. Philol., IX. 321.

2. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the Vulgate, or old Latin version of the Scriptures.

II. n. [cap.] 1. The Latin version of the Scriptures accepted as the authorized version of the Roman Catholic Church. It was prepared by Jerome about the close of the fourth century, partly by translation from the original, partly by revision of prior Latin versions. The Vulgate gradually came into general use between the sixth and the ninth century. The Anglo-Saxon translations were made from it and Wyclif's English version, while other English versions from Tyndale's onward have been much influenced by it. The Vulgate was the first book printed (about 1455). The Council of Trent ordered that the "old and vulgate edition," approved by the "usage of so many ages," should be the only Latin version used in "public lectures, disputations, sermons, and expositions." Authorized editions were afterward published under Sixtus V. in 1590 and Clement VIII. in 1592-3. The latter, or Clementine edition, is the present accepted standard of the Roman Catholic Church, and is the basis of the Douay Bible. The religious terminology of the languages of western Europe has been in great part derived from or influenced by the Vulgate.

2. The vulgar or popular tongue; the vernacular. [Rare.]

"Here's a pretty mess," returned the pompous gentleman, descending to the vulgate; "you threaten me, forsooth!"

J. E. Cooke, Virginia Comedians, I. xiii.

vulgus (vul'gus), n. [L. vulgus, the common people: see vulgar.] See the quotation.

Now be it known unto all you boys who are at schools which do not rejoice in the time-honoured institution of the Vulgus (commonly supposed to have been established by William of Wykeham at Winchester, and imported to Rugby by Arnold, more for the sake of the lines which were learnt by heart with it than for its own intrinsic value, as I've always understood), that it is a short exercise, in Greek or Latin verse, on a given subject, the minimum number of lines being fixed for each form.

vuln (vuln), v. t. [*OF. vulnerer, < L. vulnerare, wound: see vulnerate.] To wound: in heraldry, especially said of the pelican, which is blazoned as vulning herself when represented as tearing her breast to feed her young. Compare pelican in her piety, under pelican.

When in the profile she [the pelican in heraldry] is usually vulning herself.

Encyc. Brit., XI. 701.

vulned (vulnd), a. [L. vuln + -ed.] In her., wounded: noting any animal used as a bearing, the weapon which inflicts the wound being generally mentioned. Frequently, however, vulned refers to the bleeding of the wound: thus, the blazon may be pierced by an arrow and vulned.

A Pelican with wings expanded argent, Vulned Proper.

Vulpecula cum Ansero (vul-pek'ū-kū kum an'se-rō). [L. vulpecula, dim. of vulpes, a fox; cum, with; anser, abl. of anser, goose.] A constellation, the Fox with the Goose, first appearing in the "Prodromus Astronomiae" of Hevelius, 1690. It lies between the Eagle and the Swan, and is generally called Vulpecula. It has one star of the fourth magnitude.

vulpecular (vul-pek'ū-lār), a. [L. vulpecula, a little fox, dim. of vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] Of the nature of a fox; vulpine; of or pertaining to a fox's whelp.

Vulpes (vul'pēz), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1756), < L. vulpes, vulpes, also vulpis, a fox; cf. Gr. ὑλπίς, a fox.] A genus of foxes, giving name to the Vulpinae, whose type species is the common red fox, Canis vulpes of earlier naturalists, now Vulpes vulgaris or V. fulvus. All the vulpine quadrupeds have been placed in this genus, which, however, is now restricted by the exclusion of such forms as Urocyon (the gray foxes of America), Otocyon or Megalotis of Africa, and Nyctereutes of Japan. Even with these restrictions there are numerous species, of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America (none in South America), closely related to the common fox; as well as the more different types represented by the African fennec (Vulpes fennecus) zerrda, the Asiatic corsac (V. corsac), the North American kit (V. velox), and the circum-polar isatis, or arctic fox (V. lapponus). See cuts under arctic, corsac-fox, fennec-fox, and kit fox.

vulpicide¹ (vul'pi-sid), n. [L. vulpes, a fox, + -cida, < cedere, kill.] A fox-killer.

vulpicide² (vul'pi-sid), n. [L. vulpes, a fox, + -cidium, < cadere, kill.] The killing of a fox or of foxes.

Vulpicide, committed in defence of property, and condemned neither by religion, nor by equity, nor by any law save that of sportsmen, excites no anger that cries aloud for positive penalties.

H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 245.

Vulpinae (vul-pi'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Fulpes + -inae.] A subfamily of Canidae, represented by the genus Vulpes in a broad sense, containing the foxes as distinguished from the dogs, wolves, and jackals; the alopecoid canines. The frontal region of the skull is comparatively low from lack of frontal sinuses, and the pupil of the eye usually contracts to a vertical elliptical figure. But the group is not sharply delimited from Canidae, as the South American fox-wolves (see Pseudalopex) and some African forms (see Thous) connect the two. See Urocyon (with cut), Vulpes (with cuts there cited), and compare Megaliotinae.

vulpinate, v. i. "To play the fox"; deceive with crafty wiles or deceptions. Blount, 1670.

vulpine (vul'pin), a. [= F. vulpin = Sp. vulpino = It. volpino, volpigno, < L. vulpinus, of or pertaining to a fox, < vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] 1. Of or pertaining to a fox; technically, resembling the fox as a member of the Vulpinae; related to the foxes; alopecoid: distinguished from lupine or thoid.

Sometimes I heard the foxes as they ranged over the snow crust, in moonlight nights. . . . Sometimes one came near to my window, attracted by my light, barked a vulpine curse at me, and then retreated.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 293.

2. Resembling a fox in traits or disposition; also, characteristic of the fox; foxy; cunning; crafty.

The slyness of a vulpine craft. Feltham, Resolves, i. 12.

Lancet, 1889, i. 1032.

vulturni, n. An old spelling of vultur.

Vultur (vul'tēr), n. [NL.: see vulture.] A Linnean genus of Falconidae, variously defined. (a) Including all the vultures of both hemispheres. (b) Restricted to certain Old World vultures, as V. monachus.

vulture (vul'tūr), n. [ME. vultur, voltur, voutur, voutre, < OF. voutour, voltour, vouteur, F. voutour = Pr. voltor, voutor = Sp. buitre = Pg. abutre = Old. voltore, It. aoltore, avoltojo = W. fletur, < L. vultur, vultur, OL. also vultur, vulturus, also vulturis, vulturis, a vulture, a bird of prey, lit. 'plucker,' < vellere (perf. vulsi), pluck: see vellicate, and cf. vulturne.] 1. One of sundry large birds, of the order Raptores, which have the head and neck more or less bare of feathers, the beak and claws less powerful than in most birds of prey, and which feed largely or wholly upon carrion. They for the most part inhabit warm countries. Birds of this description are found both in the Old World and in the New; and, misled by superficial appearances and general habits, naturalists have applied the name to members of different suborders. (a) The Old World vultures, which, in spite of their peculiar outward aspect, are so little different from ordinary hawks and eagles that they can at most be considered as a subfamily Vulturinae of the family Falconidae. Of these there are several genera and numerous species, inhabiting the warmer parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, where they act as efficient scavengers to clear the earth of offal and carcasses, which would otherwise become offensive. The cinereous or brown vulture, Vultur monachus or V. cinereus, is a typical example; it inhabits all countries bordering the Mediterranean, and extends thence to India and China. The griffin-vultures are species of Gyps. The Bengal vulture, inhabiting India, is Pseudogyps bengalensis. Related species are the Angola vulture, Gypohierax angolensis (see cut under Gypohierax), and the immense Otoggys auricularis, of Africa (see Otoggys), and Lophogyps occipitalis, the Egyptian vulture, quite unlike any of the foregoing, is Neophron percnopterus often called Pharaoh's hen (see cut under Neophron). The bearded vulture of the Alps, etc., or the lammergeier, Gypheus barbatus, has the head feathered, and does not hesitate to attack living animals; this is the connecting-link between vultures and hawks or eagles, being sometimes placed in Vulturinae, sometimes in Falconidae. (See cut under Gypheus.) (b) The American vultures of the suborder Cathartidae. The species of this group with which the name vulture is specifically connected are the urubú, or black vulture, Cathartida atrata; the turkey-buzzard or turkey-vulture, Cathartida aura; and the king-vulture, Sarcorhamphus papa: the condor usually keeps its own distinctive name. See Cathartida, and cuts under condor, king vulture, turkey-buzzard, and urubú.

Whos stomak fowles tyren evermo,
That hyghten vulturis, as hookes telle.

Chaucer, Troilus, i. 788.

2. Figuratively, one who or that which resembles a vulture, especially in rapacity or in the thirst for prey.

Ye dregs of baseness, vultures amongst men,
That tire upon the hearts of generous spirits!
Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 1.

Here am I, bound upon this pillared rock, Prey to the vulture of a vast desire That feeds upon my life. O. W. Holmes, Regreta.
Let Austria's vulture have food for her beak.
Whittier, From Perugia.

Abyssinian vulture, the Lophogyps occipitalis, in which the head is not bare, the bill is red, with black tip and blue base, the feet are flesh-colored, the eyes brown, and the length is nearly 3 feet. It inhabits much of Africa, and was first described by Latham in 1821. — Arabian vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur monachus. Latham, 1781. — Ash-colored vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781. — Bearded vulture. See def. 1 (a). — Bengal vulture. See def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781. — Black vulture. (a) See def. 1 (b). (b) The Vultur monachus. Latham, 1781. — Brown vulture. See def. 1 (a). — Californian vulture, the Californian condor. See cut under condor. — Changung vulture, the Bengal vulture: so called by Latham, 1801, after le changung of Levaillant, 1790. — Cinereous vulture. See def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781. — Crane-vulture. See secretary-bird. — Crested or coped black vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur monachus. Edwards, 1760. — Eagle-vulture, the West African Gypohierax angolensis. Also called vulturine sea-eagle. See cut under Gypohierax. — Eared vulture, a vulture of the genus Otoggys, specifically O. auricularis. — Egyptian vulture. See def. 1 (a). — Fulvous vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps fulvus. Latham, 1781. — Gingl vulture, Neophron gingianus, the Indian representative of the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781 and 1821. — Indian vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps indicus, of the Indian and Malayan peninsulas, Burma, and Siam. — King of the vultures, the king-vulture. See def. 1 (b). Edwards, 1743. — Maltese vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781. — Nubian vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otoggys auricularis. — Pileated vulture, Neophron pileatus, the South African representative of the Egyptian vulture, first described as Vultur pileatus by Burchell in 1824. — Pondicherry vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otoggys calvus. — Rachamah vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Bruce, 1790. — Ruppell's vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps ruppelli. — Sacred vulture, a bird described by William Bartram in 1791, under the name of Vultur sacra, as inhabiting Florida. It has not been identified, but is supposed to be the king-vulture, Sarcorhamphus papa. — The vulture, the fulvous vulture, Gyps fulvus. Albin, 1740. — Turkey-vulture. See turkey-buzzard, and cut under Cathartida. — White vulture, the Egyptian vulture.

vulture-raven (vul'tūr-rā'vū), n. A book-name of the thick-billed African ravens, of the genus Corvultur, C. albicollis and C. crassirostris. They are noted for the stoutness and especially the depth of the bill, resulting from the strong convexity of the high-arched culmen, like that of a bird of prey. C. albicollis is 18 inches long, with the bill 3 inches along the culmen, the plumage is glossy-black, with concealed white on the neck; the beak is dark brown, with the tips of the mandibles whitish; the feet are brownish-black, the irides hazel brown. This species is South African. C. crassirostris, of northeastern Africa, is larger, being 2 feet long, with the beak nearly 4 inches. The former species was originally described by Latham as the South Sea raven, and later by Levaillant as the corbeau (whence the generic name Corvultur imposed by Lesson in 1831); another synonym is Corvus vulturinus.

Vulturidae (vul-tū'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. vultur, a vulture (see vulture), + -idae.] A family of birds, artificially composed of the birds popularly called vultures in both hemispheres. There are no good characters to distinguish the Old World vultures from the family Falconidae, of which they may at most form a subfamily Vulturinae, while, on the other hand, there are strong characters separating the American vultures from all others. The family has in consequence been nearly abandoned by ornithologists, or at least restricted to the Old World vultures. See vulture.

Vulturinae (vul-tū'ri-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vultur + -inae.] A subfamily of Falconidae, confined to the Old World, and consisting of the vultures of Europe, Asia, and Africa, characterized chiefly by their naked heads and carrion-feeding habits. See vulture.

vulturine (vul'tūr-in), a. [L. vulturinus, of or pertaining to a vulture, < vulture, a vulture. see vulture.] 1. Resembling a vulture; of or pertaining to the Vulturinae. — 2. Characteristic of a vulture, as in scenting carrion. Also vulturish.

The vulturine nose, which smells nothing but corruption, is no credit to its possessor.

Kingsley, Two Years Ago, x.

Vulturine eagle, Aquila verreauxi, of Lesson, described also the same year (1830) as Aquila vulturina by Sir A. Smith. This is an African eagle, 3 feet long, with the feet feathered to the toes, and otherwise congeneric with the golden eagle. When adult it is black, more or less extensively white on the back, rump, and upper tail-coverts;

the cere and toes are yellow, the eyes are amber-brown, and the beak is horn-color.—Vulturine guinea-fowl, the naked-necked guinea-fowl, Acryllium vulturinum. This is a remarkable form, with the head and upper part of the neck nearly bare, like a vulture's, the lower neck, the breast, and fore back plumaged with very long discrete lance-linear feathers of black, white, and blue color; the narrow acuminate middle tail-feathers long-exserted; the general plumage black, spotted with white; the lower breast light blue, and the flanks purple, ocellated with black and white. This guinea fowl inhabits Madagascar as well as various parts of continental Africa.—Vulturine raven, the vulture-raven.—Vulturine sea-eagle, an occasional erroneous name of the Angola vulture of West Africa. See cut under Gypohierax.

vulturish (vul'tūr-ish), a. [< culture + -ish]. Same as vulturine, 2.

Hawkish, aquiline, not to say vulturish.
Carlyle, Misc., IV. 246. (Davies)

vulturism (vul'tūr-izm), n. [< culture + -ism]. Vulturine character or quality; rapacity. Carlyle.

vulturn (vul'tēr-n), n. [Arbitrary var. of vulture, appar. through vulturine.] The brush-turkey of Australia, Talegallus lathamii: so named from the nakedness of the head suggesting a vulture. See cut under Talegallus.

vulturous (vul'tūr-us), a. [< culture + -ous]. Like or characteristic of a vulture.

Such gawks (Gecken) are they, and foolish peacocks, and yet with such a vulturous hunger for self-indulgence.

Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, II. 4.

vulva (vul'vā), n. [= F. vulve = Sp. Pg. vulva = It. volva, < L. vulva, volva, a covering, integument, womb, < volvere, roll around or about; see volce, volute.] 1. In anat., the external organs of generation of the female; especially, the orifice of these parts, the external termination of the vagina—of an elliptical contour in the human female.—2. In entom., the orifice of the oviduct.—3. In conch., the oval or vulviform conformation presented by certain bivalve shells when the right and left valves are in apposition. See Veneride.—Velamen vulvæ. See velamen.—Vestibule of the vulva. See vestibule.

vulvar (vul'vār), a. [< vulva + -ar]. Of or pertaining to the vulva; vulviform.—Vulvar canal. Same as vulva, 2.—Vulvar enterocoele. (a) A vaginal hernia protruding through the vulva. (b) A hernia which has descended between the ramus of the iachium and the vagina into one of the labia majora; pudendal enterocoele or hernia.—Vulvar hernia. Same as vulvar enterocoele.

vulvate (vul'vāt), a. [< vulva + -ate]. Shaped like or formed into a vulva; vulvar; vulviform.

vulviform (vul'vi-fōrm), a. [< L. vulva, womb, + forma, form; see form.] 1. In zool., shaped like the vulva of the human female; oval, with raised lips and a median cleft.—2. In bot., like a cleft with projecting edges.

vulvismus (vul-vis'mus), n. [NL., < L. vulva, vulva.] Same as vaginismus.

vulvitis (vul-vi'tis), n. [NL., < L. vulva + -itis.] Inflammation of the vulva.

vulvo-uterine (vul-vō-ū'tē-rin), a. Of or pertaining to the vulva and the uterus: as, the vulvo-uterine canal (the vagina).

vulvovaginal (vul-vō-vaj'i-nal), a. Pertaining to the vulva and the vagina.—Vulvovaginal canal. Same as vagina.—Vulvovaginal glands, the glands of Bartholin or odoriferous glands in the female, corresponding to Cowper's glands in the male. See gland.

vulvovaginitis (vul-vō-vaj-i-ni'tis), n. [NL., < vulva + vagina + -itis.] Inflammation of both the vulva and the vagina.

vum (vum), v. i. A corruption or equivalent of vow, used in the expression "I vum," a mild expletive or oath. Compare *swan*². [New Eng.]

The Deacon swore (as Deacons do,

With an "I dew vum," or an "I tell yeon").

O. W. Holmes, Deacon's Masterpiece.

vummera, n. Same as wummerah.

V-vat (vō'vat), n. In mining, a pointed or V-shaped box in which crushed or pulverized ores are sized or classified by the aid of water. The earthy particles mingled with the ore entering above fall against a current of water rising from beneath, the velocity of which is regulated so that a more or less complete separation of the ore from the gangue is effected. These boxes are generally arranged in a series of four or more, and there are many varieties of the apparatus, of which the general principle was the invention of Von Rittinger, an Austrian metallurgist. This method has proved to be of great value in ore-dressing. Also called pointed box, pyramidal box, and spitzkasten.

V. y. An abbreviation in book-catalogues of various years.

vyng (vi'ing), p. a. [Pr. of *vie*¹, v.] Competing; emulating.

vynet, n. An obsolete spelling of vine.

vynert, n. An obsolete spelling of *vincer*¹, *ri-ner*².

vyret, n. An obsolete spelling of *vire*¹.

vysart, n. An obsolete spelling of vizor.

1. The twenty-third letter and eighteenth consonant-sign in the English alphabet. It has a double value, as consonant and as vowel. As an alphabetic character it is of very modern date, being one of the four that have sprung from the Y or V added by the Greeks to the older Phœnician alphabet, and one of the three (U, V, W) that have grown out of the Roman form of that character (see U). It was made (as pointed out under U) by doubling the U- or V-sign (hence called double U), in order to distinguish properly the semivowel sound w from the spirant v and the vowel u. It was formerly often printed as two V's, VV, vv. It began to be used in the eleventh century, and gradually crowded out the special sign for the same sound which the Anglo-Saxon alphabet had possessed. The alphabetic sound distinctively represented by w is the labial semivowel, which stands in precisely the same relation to oo (ö) in which consonantal y stands to ee (ē). Each of these semivowels, if not of precisely the same mode of production with the corresponding vowel, is at any rate only very slightly different from it; w is virtually an oo which is abbreviated into a mere prefix to another vowel, a close position from which the organs by opening reach another vowel-sound; and a prolonged w is an oo. On the other hand, the semivowel y (like the semivowel y) can be only very imperfectly and indistinctly uttered after a vowel, and our w in that position is but another way of writing u; it is found only in the combinations au, eu, ou, which are equivalent to au, eu, ou; and as so used it could disappear from the language without any loss, but rather with profit. The semivowel sound w (including wh and gw, which is a way of writing kw: see under Q) is a not uncommon element of English utterance, being about 2½ per cent. of it (a little less than the spirant v). In many languages—for example, in all those that are descended from the Latin—the semivowel w tends to pass over into the spirant v-sound, and hence the spirant value of our v, which was the representative in Latin of the w-sound. In Anglo-Saxon w stood and was pronounced also before r (and in a few words before l); in such words as write, spring, the character is retained, though the sound is lost. In Anglo-Saxon, also, the w was in many words pronounced with a preceding aspiration, the relic of an original prefixed guttural h, and it was consistently and properly so written: for example, Awit, white, hwæter, where. In modern English the h has by an odd and unaccountable caprice had its place in writing changed to after the w (perhaps by analogy with the similar blunder shown in writing rh in Latin for the Greek aspirated r, or hr, or by a blind conformity with the frequent initial digraphs th, ph, sh). There is dispute among phonetists at present as to the true character of this wh-sound, some maintaining that it is not a w with preceding aspiration, but a wh counterpart to w, standing related to it as, for example, an f to a v, or an s to a z. This view rests in part, probably, on some actual difference of utterance, but in part also on unfamiliarity with the real wh; for in England the aspiration is now very generally omitted, and when, white, etc., are pronounced as wen, wite, etc. It admits of no question, however, that when, for example, is related to hoo-en precisely as wen to oo-en, the difference in each case consisting in an aspiration prefixed respectively to the vowel and semivowel—just as, correspondingly, here (which shows an h prefixed to the English “long u” sound, or yoo) is related to hoo precisely as ewe to oo: the h being here, as everywhere else (see H), uttered through the same position of the mouth-organs as the following sound. W is sometimes silent, not only as initial before r (see above), but elsewhere, as in two, word, answer, etc. It is never doubled. The assimilating influence of a w (whether written with w or with u in the combination qu) in a following a-sound is very marked, giving the a in many words the short sound of o (o), as in what, squad, etc., or the broad sound of a (ā), as in war, quart, thwart, etc.

2. As a symbol: (a) In chem., the symbol for tungsten (NL. wolframium). (b) [l.c.] In hydrodynamics, the symbol for the component of the velocity parallel to the axis of Z.—3. As an abbreviation: (a) of west; (b) of western; (c) of William; (d) of Wednesday; (e) of Welsh; (f) of warden; (g) [l.c.] of week.

wa' (wā or wā), n. A Scotch form of *wall*¹.
waat, n. An obsolete form of woe.
waag (wäg), n. [Native Abyssinian name.] The grivet, a monkey.

wabber (wab'er), n. Same as cony, 2.
wabble¹, wobble (wob'l), v.; pret. and pp. wabbled, wobbled, ppr. wabbling, wobbling. [Lg. wabbeln, wabelle, = MHG. wabelen, webelen, be in motion, fluctuate, move hither and thither; a freq. form, parallel to MHG. waberen, etc., E. *waver*¹, of the orig. verb represented by *wave*¹: see *wave*¹. In part prob. a var. of wapple*, a var.

of wapper, freq. of *wap*¹: see *wap*¹.] I. intrins. 1. To incline to the one side and to the other alternately, as a wheel, top, spindle, or other rotating body when not properly balanced; move in the manner of a rotating disk when its plane vibrates from side to side; rock; vacillate.

To wabble . . . [a low barbarous word]. Johnson, Dict. When . . . the top falls on to the table, . . . it falls into a certain oscillation, described by the expressive though inelegant word — wabbling. H. Spencer, First Principles, § 170.

It [a pendulum] should be symmetrical on each side of the middle plane of its vibration, or it will wobble. Sir E. Reckett, Clocks and Watches, p. 42.

Hence—2. To vacillate, vibrate, tremble, or exhibit unevenness, in senses other than mechanical. [Colloq.]

Ferri . . . made use of the tremolo upon every note, to such an extent that his whole singing was a bad wobbling trill. Grove, Dict. Music, III. 500.

II. trans. To cause to wabble: as, to wabble one's head. [Colloq.]

wabble¹, wobble (wob'l), n. [*< wabble*¹, v.] A rocking, unequal motion, as of a wheel unevenly hung or a top imperfectly balanced.

The wind had raised a middling stiff wobble on the water, and the boat jumped and tumbled in a very lively manner. W. C. Russell, Jack's Courtship, xx.

wabble² (wob'l), n. [A dial. var. of *wabble*³, n.] The larva of the emasculating bot-fly, Cutiterebra emasculator, which infests squirrels in the United States; also, the injury or affection resulting from its presence. See *wabble*³, and cut under Cutiterebra. Also worble.

A very large percentage [of fifty chipmunks] . . . were infested with wabbles. Rep. of U. S. Dept. of Agriculture (1889), I. 215.

wabble³ (wob'l), n. An old name of the great auk, Alca impennis. Josselyn, New England Rarities Discovered.

wabblers (wob'lér), n. [*< wabble*¹ + *-er*¹.] One who or that which wabbles. Specifically—(a) Same as drunken cutter (which see, under cutter). (b) A boiled leg of mutton. [Prov. Eng.]

wabble-saw (wob'l-sā), n. A circular saw hung out of true on its arbor, used to cut dovetail slots, mortises, etc. E. H. Knight.

wabbly, wobbly (wob'li), a. [*< wabble*¹ + *-y*¹.] Inclined to wabble; shaky; unsteady; vibrant; tremulous.

Dismal sounds may express dismal emotions, and soft sounds soft emotions, and wabbly sounds uncertain emotions. E. Gurney, Nineteenth Century, XIII. 446.

wabron-leaf, wabran-leaf (wā'brōn-, wā'brān-lēf), n. [< wabron, wabran, perhaps a corruption of waybread (q. v.), + leaf.] The great plantain, Plantago major. See *plantain*¹ (with cut). [Scotch.]

wabster (wab'stér), n. A Scotch form of wabster. Willie was a wabster guide, Could stown a clew wi' ony body. Burns, Willie Wastie.

wacapou (wak'a-pō), n. A leguminous tree, Andira Aubletii, of French Guiana. It furnishes a brownish straight-grained wood, scarcely sound enough for architectural purposes, but suitable for many domestic uses. A similar but inferior wood is called wacapou grisea.

wacchet, waccheret. Old spellings of watch, watcher.
wacke (wak'e), n. [< G. wacke, MHG. wacke, a rock projecting from the surface of the ground, a large flint or stone; origin unknown.] A soft homogeneous clay arising from the decomposition of some form of volcanic or eruptive rock. It is of a greenish or brownish color. Compare graywacke.
wacken¹ (wak'n), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of waken.
wacken² (wak'n), a. [< ME. waken, < AS. wacen, pp. of wacan, wake: see *wake*¹.] 1. Watchful.—2. Lively; sharp; wanton. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wad¹ (wod), n. [Early mod. E. wadde; cf. D. watte = G. watte, wad, wadding, = OSw. wad, clothing, cloth, stuff, Sw. vadd, wadding, = Dan. vad, wadding, = Icel. vadr*, in comp. vadmál, a woolen stuff, wadmál (see vadmál); akin to MD. waede, waeye = MLG. wade, G. watte, a large fishing-net, = Icel. vadr, a fishing-net, and to AS. wæd, etc., clothing, weed: see *weed*². Hence (< G. watte) F. ouate (> Sp. huata) = It. ovata (ML. wadda) = Russ. vata, wad, wadding. The relations of the forms are involved; E. wad is perhaps in part short for the obs. vadmál.] 1. A small bunch or wisp of rags, hay, hair, wool, or other fibrous material, used for stuffing, for lessening the shock of hard bodies against each other, or for packing.

A wisp of rushes, or a clod of land, Or any wadde of hay that's next to hand, They'll steal. John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

Know you yonder lumps of melancholy, Yonder bundle of sighs, yonder wad of groans? Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, ed. 1874, II. 17).

2. Specifically, something, as a piece of cloth, paper, or leather, used to hold the powder or bullet, or both, in place in a gun or cartridge. For ordinary double- or single-barreled shot-guns, wads are disks of felt, leather, or pasteboard cut by machinery or by a hand-tool, often indented to allow passage of air in ramming home, and sometimes specially treated with a composition which helps to keep the barrels from fouling. See cut under shot-cartridge.

Wads are punched out of sheets of various materials by cutters fixed in a press. Those most commonly used are made of felts, cardboard, or jute. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 800.

3. In ceram., a small piece of finer clay used to cover the body of an inferior material in some varieties of earthenware; especially, the piece doubled over the edge of a vessel.—Junk wad. See junk-wad. Selvage-wad. Same as gromet-wad.

wad¹ (wod), v. t.; pret. and pp. wadded, ppr. wadding. [= G. watten (cf. freq. G. wattieren = D. watteren = Dan. vattere), wad; from the noun.] 1. To form into a wad or into wadding; press together into a mass, as fibrous material.

—2. To line with wadding, as a garment, to give more roundness or fullness to the figure, keep out the cold, render soft, or protect in any way.

A parcel of Superannuated Debauchees, huddled up in Cloaks, Frize Coats and Wadded Gowns. Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 300.

The quickest of us walk about well wadded with stupidity. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xx.

3. To pad; stuff; fill out with or as with wadding.

His skin with sugar being wadded, With liquid fires his entrails burn'd. J. G. Cooper, tr. of Ver-Vert, iv. (an. 1750).

4. To put a wad into, as the barrel of a gun; also, to hold in place by a wad, as a bullet.

wad² (wod), v. A Scotch form of weed.
wad³ (wod), n. A Scotch form of would.
wad⁴ (wod), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of woad.

wad⁵ (wod), n. [Also wadd; origin obscure.] 1. An impure earthy ore of manganese, which consists of manganese dioxide associated with the oxide of iron, cobalt, or copper. When mixed with linseed-oil for a paint it is apt to take fire. Also called hog-manganese, earthy manganese.—2. Same as plumbago. [Prov. Eng.]

wadable (wā'da-bl), a. [< wade + -able.] That may be waded; fordable. Coles; Halliwell.

wad-cutter (wod'kut'ér), n. A device for cutting wads. There are many kinds. The simplest is a circular chisel or gouge struck with a hammer or mallet.

wadd, n. See *wad*⁵. wadder (wod'ér), n. [*< wad*⁴ + *-er*¹.] A grower of wad or woad. Halliwell.

wadding (wod'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *wad*¹, v.] 1. Wads collectively; stuffing; specifically, carded cotton or wool used to line or stuff articles of dress, the surface of the spongy web of carded material being covered with tissue-paper or with a coat of size.

The seat, with plenteous wadding stuff'd.

Couper, Task, l. 31.

Aristoteles, and all the rest of you, must have the wadding of straw and saw-dust shaken out, and then we shall know pretty nearly your real weight and magnitude.

Lander, Imag. Conv., Diogenes and Plato.

2. Material for gun-wads.

wadding-sizer (wod'ing-si'zér), n. A machine for applying a coating of size to the surface of a bat of cotton, to make wadding. E. H. Knight.

waddle¹ (wod'l), v.; pret. and pp. waddled, ppr. waddling. [A dim. and freq. of wade.] I. intrans. To sway or rock from side to side in walking; move with short, quick steps, throwing the body from one side to the other; walk in a tottering or vacillating manner; toddle.

Then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,

She could have run and waddled all about.

Shak., R. and J., l. 8. 37.

Every member waddled home as fast as his short legs could carry him, wheezing as he went with corpulency and terror.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 487.

-Syn. Waddle, Toddle. Wadding is a kind of ungainly walking produced by the great weight or natural clumsiness of the walker; toddling is the movement of a child in learning to walk.

II. trans. To tread down by wading or waddling through, as high grass. [Rare.]

They tread and waddle all the goodly grass.

Drayton, Moon-Calf.

waddle¹ (wod'l), n. [*< waddle*¹, v.] The act of walking with a swaying or rocking motion from side to side; a clumsy, rocking gait, with short steps; a toddle.

waddle² (wod'l), n. and v. A dialectal form of wattle.

waddle³ (wod'l), n. [Perhaps a perverted form of wannel, *< wanel*¹, v.] The wane of the moon. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

waddler (wod'lér), n. [*< waddle*¹ + *-er*¹.] One who or that which waddles.

waddling (wod'ling), n. [Verbal n. of *waddle*².] A watted fence. [Prov. Eng.]

To arbor begun and quicksett about,

No poling nor waddling till set be far out.

Tusser, Husbandrie, p. 88. (Davies.)

waddlingly (wod'ling-li), adv. With a waddling gait.

waddy (wad'i), n.; pl. waddies (-iz). [Australian.] 1. A war-club of heavy wood, grooved in such a way that the edges of the grooves serve as cutting edges to increase the efficacy of the blow: used by the Australian aborigines. Also waddie.

In battle, a blow from a waddy lays low a companion.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 78.

Hence—2. A walking-stick. [Australia.]

wade (wád), v.; pret. and pp. waded, ppr. wading. [< ME. waden (pret. waded, earlier wod, pp. waden), < AS. wadan (pret. wōd, pl. wōdon, pp. waden), go, move, advance, trudge, also wade, = OFries. wada = D. waden = OHG. watan, MHG. waten, G. waten, wade, ford, = Icel. vada = Dan. vade = Sw. vada, wade, = L. vadere, go. Hence ult. *waddle*¹. From the L. vadere come E. evade, invade, pervade, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To walk through any substance that impedes the free motion of the limbs; move by stepping through a fluid or other semi-resisting medium: as, to wade through water; to wade through sand or snow.

She waded through the dirt to pluck him off me.

Shak., T. of the S., iv. l. 80.

2†. To enter in; penetrate.

Whan myght is joynd unto crueltee,

Allas, to depe wold the venym wade.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 504.

3. To move or pass with difficulty or labor, real or apparent; make way against hindrances or embarrassments, as depth, obscurity, or resistance, material or mental.

Of this and that they playde and gonnen wade

In many an unkouth, glad, and deepe matere.

Chaucer, Troilus, ll. 150.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brain of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, l. 2.

I lament what he [Mr. Fox] must wade through to real power, if ever he should arrive there.

Walpole, Letters, ll. 494.

Wading birds, the waders; Grallæ or Grallatores.

II. trans. To pass or cross by wading; ford: as, to wade a stream.

Then the three Gods waded the river.

William Morris, Sigurd, ll.

wade (wád), n. [< wade, v.; in def. 2 = waddé = Icel. vad, a ford.] 1. The act of wading: as, a wade in a brook.—2. A place where wading is done; a ford. [Colloq.]

It was a wade of fully a mile, and every now and then the water just touched the ponies' bellies.

The Field, April 4, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

3. A road. See the quotation.

The word wade, properly a ford, is used here to signify a road, and not merely the crossing of water. It is, I believe, extinct as a noun, though it survives as a verb.

A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 271.

wader (wá'dér), n. [< wade + *-er*¹.] 1. One who or that which wades.

I saw where James

Made toward us, like a wader in the surf,

Beyond the brook, waist-deep in meadow-sweet.

Tennyson, The Brook.

2. In ornith., any bird belonging to the old order Grallæ or Grallatores, comprising a great number of long-legged wading birds, as distinguished from those water-birds which have short legs and webbed feet and habitually swim. The order has been broken up, or much modified; but wader is conveniently applied to such birds as cranes, herons, storks, ibises, plovers, snipes, sandpipers, and rails.

3. High water-proof boots worn by fishermen or sportsmen in general for wading through water.

An ardent votary of fly and bank-fishing, with waders and a two-handed rod.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 682.

wadge (waj), v. A dialectal form of wage. Halliwel.

wad-hook (wod'húk), n. A ramrod fitted with a wormer, for extracting wads from a gun; also, the wormer of such a rod.

Wadhurst clay. In Eng. geol., a division of the Wealden.

wadi, wady (wod'i), n. [< Ar. wādī, a ravine, hence, a river-channel, river. This word appears in several Spanish river-names—namely, Guadalquivir (Wādī-l-kebir, 'the great river'), Guadalazara, Guadalupe, Guadiana, etc.] The channel of a watercourse which is dry except in the rainy season; a watercourse; a stream: a term used chiefly in the topography of certain Eastern countries.

The real wady is, generally speaking, a rocky valley, bisected by the bed of a mountain torrent, dry during the hot season.

R. F. Burton, El-Medina, p. 100.

wadmal (wod'mål), n. [Also wadmoll, wad-molle, and irreg. wadmeal, wadmeal, and (representing Icel. wadmál; < Icel. wadmál (= Dan. wadmæl = Sw. wadmål), a woolen stuff, *< wadr, cloth (see *wad*¹), + mål, a measure.] A thick woolen cloth.

Yron, Wool, Wadmoll, Gotsell, Ridfell also.

Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 188.

Wadmel. A coarse hairy stuff, made of Icelandic wool, and brought from thence by our seamen to Norfolk and Suffolk.

Gosse, Prov. Gloss.

Her upper garment . . . was of a coarse dark-colored stuff called wadmal, then [early in the eighteenth century] much used in the Zetland islands. Scott, Pirate, v.

wadmiltit (wod'mil-tilt), n. [*< wadmil, wadmál, + *tilt*².] A strong rough woolen cloth employed to cover powder-barrels and to protect ammunition.

wadna (wod'nä), n. A Scotch form (properly two words) of would no—that is, would not.

wad-punch (wod'punch), n. A kind of wad-cutter.

wadset (wod'set), n. [Also wadsett; *< wad*² + *set*¹, stake.] In Scots law, a mortgage, or bond and disposition in security.

And the rental book, Jeanie—clear three hundred sterling—deil a wadset, heritable band, or burden.

Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvi.

wadsetter (wod'set-ör), n. [< wadset + *-er*¹.] In Scots law, one who holds by a wadset; a mortgagee.

wady, n. See wadi.

With wae I hear our plaint.

Old Morris (Child's Ballads, II. 38).

waeness (wä'nes), n. [*< wae*¹ + -ness.] Sadness. [Scotch.]

A feeling of thankfulness, of waeness and great gladness.

Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, iv.

waesome (wä'sum), adv. A dialectal (Scotch) form of woesome.

She kend her lot would be a waesome ane, but it was of her own framing, sae she desired the less pity.

Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xlv.

waesucks, interj. [*< wae*¹ + sucks*, perhaps a vague variation of sakes as used in exclamation.] Alas! [Scotch.]

Waesucks! for him that gets nae lass.

Burns, Holy Fair.

waf¹, a. See *waff*².

waf², n. An obsolete preterit of *waave*¹.

wafer (wä'fär), n. [< ME. wafre, wafoure = OF. wafre, gaufre, goffre (ML. gualfra), F. gaufre (Walloon wafre, wafre), < MD. wafel, D. wafel (> E. waffle) = LG. wafel = G. wabe, a honeycomb, cake of wax; cf. Dan. vaffel = Sw. väffa, wafer (< LG. f); see waffle, and cf. gauffer, goffer, and gopher, from the mod. F.] A thin cake or leaf of paste, generally disk-shaped. Specifically—(a) A cake, apparently corresponding to the modern waife, and, like it, served hot.

For ar [ere] I have bred of mele, ofte mote I swete.

And ar the comune haue corne ynough, many a colde mornynge;

So, ar my wafres ben ywrougt, moche wo I tholye.

Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 268.

Wafres pipyng hot out of the gleede [fire].

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 198.

(b) A small and delicate cake or biscuit, usually sweetened, variously flavored, and sometimes rolled up.

Thy lips, with age, as any wafer thin.

Drayton, Idea, viii.

She should say grace to every bit of meat,

And gape no wider than a wafer's thickness.

B. Jonson, Case is Altered, II. 8.

(c) A thin circular disk of unleavened bread used in the celebration of the eucharist in the Roman Catholic Church and in many Anglican churches. The wafer derives its form from the fact that the bread of the Jews was ordinarily in this shape; and both the ancient pictured representations and the references in the early patristic literature confirm the opinion that this was the form in use in the church from the apostolic days. Wafers are usually stamped with the form of a cross, crucifix, or Agnus Dei, with the initials I. H. S., or sometimes with a monogram representing the name of Christ. See altar-bread, and oblate, n., 2.

The usual bread and wafer, hitherto named singing cakes, which served for the use of the private Mass.

Abp. Parker, Injunctions (1559), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 211.

(d) A thin disk of dried paste, used for sealing letters, fastening documents together, and similar purposes, usually made of flour mixed with water, gum, and some non-poisonous coloring matter. Fancy transparent wafers are made of gelatin and isinglass in a variety of forms.

Perhaps the folds [of a letter] were lovingly connected by a wafer, pricked with a pin, and the direction written in a vile scrawl, and not a word spelt as it should be.

Colman, Jealous Wife, l.

(e) In artillery, a kind of primer. See *primer*².

Fortunately, the wafers by which the guns are discharged had been removed from the vents.

Freble, Hist. Flag, p. 471.

(f) In med., a thin circular sheet of dry paste used to facilitate the swallowing of powder. The sheet is moistened, and folded over the powder placed in its center. Sometimes wafers have the form of two watchglass-shaped disks of pasty material, which are made to adhere by moistening their edges, the powder being placed in the hollow between the two.—Medallion wafer, a wafer bearing some design on a ground of a different color.

wafer (wä'fär), v. t. [< wafer, n.] 1. To attach by means of a wafer or wafers.

This little bill is to be wafered on the shop-door.

Dickens, Pickwick, l.

2. To seal or close by means of a wafer.

He . . . wafered his letter, and rushed with it to the neighboring post-office. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xix.

wafer-ash (wä'fär-ash), n. The hop-tree, Ptelea trifoliata: so called from its ash-like leaves and flat key-fruit suggesting a wafer. The bark of the root is considerably used as a tonic. See hop-tree.

wafer-bread (wä'fär-bred), n. Altar-bread made in the form of a wafer or wafers.

To communicate kneeling in wafer-bread.

Abp. Parker, To Sir W. Cecil, April 30, 1566, in Correa. [Abp. Parker (Parker Soc.), p. 240.]

wafer-cake (wä'fär-käk), n. 1†. Same as wafer (a).

Oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes.

Shak., Hen. V., II. 2. 58.

2. Same as wafer (c).

The Pope's Merchants also chaffered here [Lombard Street] for their Commodities, and had good markets for their Wafer Cakes, sanctified at Rome, their Pardons, &c. Stow, quoted in F. Martin's Hist. Lloyd's, p. 30.

wafeler (wā'fēr-er), n. [< ME. wafeler, wafere; < wafel + -er.] A maker or seller of wafers, either for the table or for eucharistic use. See wafel. Wafelers (of both sexes, compare wafel-woman) appear to have been employed as go-betweens in intrigues, probably from the facilities offered by their going from house to house.

Syngereð with harpes, baudes, wafeleres
Whiche ben the verray devoles officers
To kindle and blowe the fyr of [lecherie].
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 17.

wafel-iron (wā'fēr-i'ern), n. [< wafel + iron. Cf. wafle-iron.] A contrivance in which wafers are baked. Its chief part is a pair of thin blades between which the paste is held while it is exposed to heat.

wafelstert, n. [ME. wafrestre, wauwrestre; < wafel + -ster.] A woman who makes or sells wafers; a female wafeler.

"Wyte god," quath a wafrestre, "wist ich the sothe, Ich wolde no forther a lot for no freres preaching."
Piers Plowman (C), viii. 285.

wafel-tongs (wā'fēr-tōngz), n. Same as wafel-iron.

Make the wafel-tongs hot over the hole of a stove or clear fire.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 155.

wafel-woman (wā'fēr-wum'an), n. A woman who sold wafers. Compare wafeler.

'Twas no set meeting certainly, for there was no wafel-woman with her these three days, on my knowledge.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, II. 1.

wafery¹ (wā'fēr-i), a. [< wafel + -y.] Like a wafel: as, a wafery thinness.

wafery² (wā'fēr-i), n. [Early mod. E. wafrie; < wafel + -y (see -ery).] Wafers collectively; pastry; cakes.

The tartes, wafrie, and iounkettes, that wer to be served and to com in after the meat.
J. Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 192. (Davies.)

waff¹ (wāf), v. [A var. of *wave*¹, affected by waf, v.] An obsolete form of *wave*¹.

waff¹ (wāf), n. [*< waff*¹, v. Cf. waf, n.] 1. The act of waving. Jamieson.—2. A hasty motion. Jamieson.—3. A slight stroke from any soft body. Jamieson.—4. A sudden or slight ailment: as, a waff o' cauld. Jamieson.—5. A spirit or ghost. Halliwel. [Obsolete or provincial in all uses.]

waff² (wāf), v. i. [Also waugh; a var. of *wap*³.] To bark. [Prov. Eng.]

The elder folke and well growne . . . barked like bigge dogges; but the children and little ones waughed as small whelpes.
Holland, tr. of Camden, II. 188. (Davies.)

waff³, waf (wāf), a. [See waf, a.] Worthless; low-born; inferior; paltry. [Scotch.]

Is it not an oddlike thing that ilka waf carle in the country has a son and heir, and that the house of Ellangowan is without male succession?
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxix.

waffel¹ (wōf'l), n. [= G. waffel = Dan. waffel = Sw. vaffla, < D. and LG. wafel, wafel: see wafel.] A particular kind of batter cake baked in waffel-irons and served hot.

We sat at tea in Armstrong's family dining-room; . . . the waitress passed out and in, bringing plates of waffels.
The Century, XXVI. 283.

waffel² (wōf'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. waffled, ppr. waffling. [Freq. of *waff*¹.] To wave; fluctuate. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] waffel³ (wōf'l), v. i. [Freq. of *waff*².] To bark incessantly. Wright. [Prov. Eng.] waffel-iron (wōf'l-i'ern), n. [= D. wafel-ijzer = G. waffel-eisen; as waffel + iron. Cf. wafel-iron.] An iron utensil for baking waffels over a fire, having two flat halves hinged together, one to contain the batter, the other to cover it.

Waffel-irons.

The iron has handles or projections by which it is readily turned, bringing each side near the fire alternately. The batter is quickly cooked, as the large heating-surface is increased by projections which stud the irons and indent the waffel.

She took down the long-handled waffel-irons, and made a plate of those delicious cakes.
K. Eglington, The Graysons, xxxi.

wafouret, n. An old spelling of wafel.

waf (wāf), v. [A secondary form of wave, through the pp. waved, > waf, pp.: see *wave*¹.

Cf. *waff*¹.] I. intrans. To be moved or to pass in a buoyant medium; float.

The face of the waters waffing in a storm so wrinkles itself that it makes upon its forehead furrows.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 81.

High on the summit of this dubious cliff
Deucalion waffing moor'd his little skiff.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., l. 432.

II. trans. 1. To bear through a fluid or buoyant medium; convey through or as through water or air.

Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all [to Dordrecht] till the ships at Middleborough were returned into our kingdom, by the force whereof they might be the more strongly waffed over.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waf a sigh from Indus to the Pole.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 58.

2†. To buoy up; cause to float; keep from sinking.

Whether cripples and mutilated persons, who have lost the greatest part of their thighs, will not sink but float, their lungs being able to waf up their bodies, . . . we have not made experiment.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 6.

3†. To give notice by something in motion; signal to, as by waving the hand; beckon.

One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand *waf*s to her.
Shak., T. of A., i. 1. 70.

4†. To cast lightly and quickly; turn.

I met him
With customary compliment; when he,
Waffing his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 872.

waff (wāf), n. [< waf, v.] 1. The act of one who or that which *waf*s; a sweep; a beckoning. Also spelled weft.

There have already been made two *waf*s from the warder's turret, to intimate that those in the castle are impatient for your return.

And the lonely seabird crosses
With one waf of the wing.
Tennyson, The Captain.

2. That which is blown; a breath; a blast; a puff.

D'y'e hear, trumpets, when the bride appears, salute her with a melancholy waf.
Vanbrugh, Asop, v. 1.

A waf of peace and calm, like a breeze from paradise, fell upon Malvolti's heart.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxxv.

3. A transient odor or effluvium. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

The vestal fires were perpetual, and the fire of the altar never went out. Spices and *waf*s of these evils may be found in the sincerest Christians.
Rev. S. Ward, Sermons and Treatises, p. 75.

A strumpet's love will have a waf i' th' end,
And distaste the vessel.
Middleton, Mad World, iv. 3.

4. Naut., a signal displayed from a ship by hoisting a flag rolled up lengthwise with one or more stops. Before the establishment of a universal system of signals, a waf at the flagstaff signified a man overboard, at the peak it indicated a wish to speak, and at a masthead it was used to recall boats. Also dialectally wef and erroneously waf.

waffage (wāf'tāj), n. [< waf + -age.] The act of waffing, or the state of being waffed; conveyance or transportation through or over a buoyant medium, as air or water; especially, passage by water.

A ship you sent me to, to hire waffage.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 1. 95.

Not leaving him so much as a poor halfpenny to pay for his waffage.
Randolph, Jealous Lovers, iv. 4.

wafter (wāf'tēr), n. [< waf + -er.] 1. One who or that which *waf*s.

Charon, oh, Charon,
Thou wafter of the souls to bliss or bane!
Fletcher, Mad Lover, iv. 1.

2†. A boat for passage or transport.

There went before the lord-mayor's barge a foyste for a wafter full of ordinance.
Quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 479.

3†. The master of a passage-boat or transport.

The . . . great master . . . sent vessels called brigantines, for to cause the wafers of the sea to come into Rhodes for the keeping and fortifying of the towne, the which at the first sending came and presented their persons and ships.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 76.

4. A sword having the flat part placed in the usual direction of the edge, blunted for exercises. Mayrick. (Halliwel.)

waffure (wāf'tūr), n. [< waf + -ure.] The act of waffing or waving; a beckoning or gesture.

But, with an angry waffure of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you.
Shak., J. C., II. 1. 246.

Where least expected, the Platonic seed seems blown by the continual waffure of the winds of destiny.
Jour. Spec. Phil., XIX. 51.

wag¹ (wag), v.; pret. and pp. wagged, ppr. wagging. [< ME. waggen, < OSw. wagga, wag, fluctuate, rock (a cradle), Sw. vagg, rock (a cradle) (cf. Icel. vagg = OSw. wagga, Sw. vagg, a cradle; = Dan. vugge, a cradle, vugge, rock a cradle); a secondary form (parallel with AS. wagian, wag, > ME. wawen (see waw²) = OHG. wagōn, wecken, cause to move, = Goth. waggjan, gawaggjan, make wag, stir, shake) of AS. wegan = OHG. wegan, move, = Goth. gawigan, shake up, cause to move: see weigh.] I. trans. 1. To cause to move up and down, backward and forward, or from side to side, alternately, as a small body jointed or attached to, or connected with, a larger one; cause to move one way or another, as on a pivot or joint, or on or from something by which the body moved is supported; cause to shake, oscillate, or vibrate slightly. From the quick, jerky, or abrupt motion indicated by the word, an idea of playful, sportive, mocking, scornful, or derisive motion is associated with it in certain phrases: as, to wag the head or the finger.

And thanne fondeth the Fende my fruit to destruye
With alle the wyles that he can, and waggeth the rote.
Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 41.

He found him selfe unwist so ill bestad
That him he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q., V. 1. 22.

And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads.
Mat. xxvii. 89.

Let ditch-bred wealth henceforth forget to wag
Her base, though golden tail.
Quarles, Emblems, II. 12.

Let me see the proudest
 . . . but wag his finger at thee.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 3. 181.

He would plant himself straight before me, and stand wagging that bud of a tail.
Dr. J. Brown, Rab., p. 12.

2†. To nudge.

Ich wondrede what that was, and waggde Conscience; . . .
Quath Conscience, . . . "this is Crakes messenger."
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 204.

To wag one's chin or jaw. See chin.—To wag one's tongue. See tongue.

II. intrans. 1. To move backward and forward, up and down, or from side to side, alternately, as if connected with a larger body by a joint, pivot, or any flexible or loose attachment; oscillate; sway or swing; vibrate: an arrow is said to wag when it vibrates in the air.

Yet saugh I never, by my fader kyn,
How that the hopur [hopper] waggis til and fra.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 119.

Old men are the truest lovers; young men are inconstant, and wag with every wind.
Shirley, Love Tricks, l. 1.

The dreary black sea-weed lolls and wags.
Lowell, Appledore, l.

2. To be in motion or action; make progress; continue a course or career; stir. [Now colloq.]

"Thus we may see," quoth he, "how the world wags."
Shak., As you Like it, II. 7. 28.

They made a pretty good shift to wag along.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, II.

3. To move on or away; be off; depart; pack off; be gone. [Now colloq.]

It is said by manner of a pious-bill speech that he who fludes himself well should not wag.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 194.

At length the busy time begins.
"Come, neighbours, we must wag." Corper, Yearly Distress.

wag¹ (wag), n. [*< wag*¹, v.] The act of wagging; a shake; an oscillation.

He . . . introduced himself with a wag of his tail, intimating a general willingness to be happy.
Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 1st ser., p. 87.

wag² (wag), n. [Early mod. E. wagge; perhaps short for waghalter, formerly used humorously for 'a rogue' (cf. 'a mad wag' with 'a mad waghalter'), *< wag*¹, with ref. to moving the head playfully or derisively: see *wag*¹.] 1. One who is given to joking or jesting; a witty or humorous person; one full of sport and humor; a droll fellow. The word seems formerly to have been applied to a person who indulged in coarse, low, or broad humor, or buffoonery, as a practical joker.

Sir Fran. A prodigious civil gentleman, uncle; and yet as bold as Alexander upon occasion.

Unc. Rich. Upon a lady's occasion.
Sir Fran. Ha, ha, you are a wag, uncle.

Fanbrugh, Journey to London, III. 1.

A wag is the last order even of pretenders to wit and good humour. He has generally his mind prepared to receive some occasion of merriment, but is of himself too empty to draw out any of his own set of thoughts; and therefore laughs at the next thing he meets, not because it is ridiculous, but because he is under a necessity of laughing.
Steele, Tatler, No. 194.

2. A fellow: used with a shade of meaning sometimes slurring, sometimes affectionate, but without any attribution of humor or pleasantry. [Colloq. and archaic.]

But mildly and calmly shew how discredit reboundeth upon the authors, as dust fleth back into the wag's eyes that will needs be puffing it up.

G. Harvey, Four Letters, Pref.

And, with the Nymphs that haunt the silver streames, Learn to entice the affable young wagge.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, II. 66).

My master shall . . . make thee, instead of handling false dice, finger nothing but gold and silver, wag. . . . Wilt be secret?

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, III. 2.

Let us see what the learned wag maintains

With such a prodigal waste of brains.

Longfellow, Golden Legend, VI.

wage (wāj), n. [ME. wage, < OF. wage, guage, gag = Pr. gatge, gaighe, gaji = Sp. gage = It. gaggio, a gage, pledge, guaranty: see *gage*¹, n.] 1†. A gage; a pledge; a stake.

But th' Elin knight, which ought that warlike wage, Disdained to loose the meed he wone in fray.

Spenser, F. Q., I. iv. 39.

2. That which is paid for a service rendered; what is paid for labor; hire: now usually in the plural. Sometimes the plural form is used as a singular. In common use the word wages is applied specifically to the payment made for manual labor or other labor of a menial or mechanical kind: distinguished (but somewhat vaguely) from salary (which see), and from fee, which denotes compensation paid to professional men, as lawyers and physicians.

I am worthy noon odyr wage, But for to dwell in cendeles woo.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 174.

The wages of sin is death. Rom. vi. 23.

Since thou complainest of thy service and wages, be content to go back, and what our country will afford I do here promise to give thee.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, I.

With a wage usually from twenty to twenty-five shillings a week.

Nineteenth Century, XXII. 491.

One of the last matters transacted was the issue of the writs to the sheriffs and borough magistrates for the payment of the wages of the representatives in the house of commons.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 447.

Real wages, in polit. econ., wages estimated not in money but in their purchasing power over commodities in general: the articles or services which the money wages will purchase. — Syn. 2. Pay, Hire, etc. See *salary*¹.

wage (wāj), v.; pret. and pp. waged, ppr. waging. [ME. wagen, < OF. wagen, waigier, guager, gager, gagier, F. gager = Pr. gatgar, gajgar, < ML. wadiare, pledge: see *gage*¹, v., and cf. *wed*¹.] I. trans. 1†. To pledge; bet; stake on a chance; lay; wager.

A certein friende of yours . . . had waged with your honour a certein wager.

Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

At the last I seem'd his follower, not partner, and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 40.

7. In ceram., to knead, work, or temper, as potters' clay. — To wage one's law, in old Eng. law, to come forward as a defendant, with others, on oath that he (the defendant) owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he has declared. See wager.

II. intrans. 1. To contend; battle. [Rare.]

I abjure all roofs, and choose To wage against the enemy o' the air, To be a comrade with the wolf and owl.

Shak., Lear, II. 4. 212.

2. To serve as a pledge or stake for something else; be opposed as equal stakes in a wager; be equal in value: followed by with. [Rare.]

The commodity wages not with the danger.

Shak., Pericles, iv. 2. 34.

wagedom (wāj'dum), n. [wage + -dom.] The method of paying wages for work done. [Rare.]

The employer of labour pockets the whole of the increment of value, leaving to the labourers only what they had to start with—viz., their own bodies, plus the cost of their maintenance during the process, and a small allowance for wear and tear. . . . Such is the modern system of wagedom.

Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 136.

wage-earner (wāj'er'nēr), n. One who receives stated wages for labor.

Radical manufacturers and traders . . . have no more thought for the condition of the wage-earners who produce this profit than a Southern planter had for the religious welfare of his gang of slaves.

Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 788.

wage-fund, wages-fund (wāj'fund, wā'jez-fund), n. In polit. econ., that part of the total productive capital of a country or community which is employed in paying the wages of labor, as distinguished from the part invested in buildings, machinery, raw materials, etc. See the quotations.

Wages, then, depend mainly upon the demand and supply of labour, or, as it is often expressed, on the proportion between population and capital. By population is here meant the number only of the labouring class, or rather of those who work for hire; and by capital only circulating capital, and not even the whole of that, but the part which is expended in the direct purchase of labour. To this, however, must be added all funds which, without forming a part of capital, are paid in exchange for labour, such as the wages of soldiers, domestic servants, and all other unproductive labourers. There is unfortunately no mode of expressing by one familiar term the aggregate of what may be called the wages-fund of a country; and, as the wages of productive labour form nearly the whole of that fund, it is usual to overlook the smaller and less important part, and to say that wages depend on population and capital. It will be convenient to employ this expression, remembering, however, to consider it as elliptical, and not as a literal statement of the entire truth.

J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., II. xi. 1.

As I understand this passage [from Mill's "Pol. Econ."], it embraces the following statements: 1st, Wages-fund is a general term, used, in the absence of any other more familiar, to express the aggregate of all wages at any given time in possession of the laboring population; 2nd, on the proportion of this fund to the number of the laboring population depends at any given time the average rate of wages; 3rd, the amount of the fund is determined by the amount of the general wealth which is applied to the direct purchase of labor, whether with a view to productive or to unproductive employment. If the reader will carefully consider these several propositions, I think he will perceive that they do not contain matter which can be properly regarded as open to dispute. The first is little more than a definition. . . . The second merely amounts to saying that the quotient will be such as the dividend and divisor determine. The third equally contains an indisputable assertion; since, whatever be the remote causes on which the wages of hired labor depend, . . . the proximate act determining their aggregate amount must in all cases be a direct purchase of its services. In truth, the demand for labor, thus understood, as measured by the amount of wealth applied to the direct purchase of labor, might more correctly be said to be, than to determine, the Wages-fund. It is the Wages-fund in its inchoate stage, differing from it only as wealth just about to pass into the hands of laborers differs from the same wealth when it has got into their hands.

wageoure, n. An obsolete form of wager.

wager (wāj'jēr), n. [ME. wageoure, wajour, < *OF. wageure, gagure, a wager, < wager, pledge, wager: see wage, v.] 1. A pledge; a gage; a guaranty.

A wajour he made, so hit was ytold, Ya heved of to amhyte, yef me him brohte in hold.

Execution of Sir Simon Fraser (Child's Ballads, VI. 379).

2. Something hazarded on an uncertain event; a stake. By statutes of England, Scotland, and most if not all of the United States, all contracts or agreements, whether by parole or in writing, involving wagers are null and void, and the wager or money due thereon cannot be recovered in any court of law. A wager is: therefore merely a debt of honor, and if paid it is in the eye of the law the same thing as giving a gratuity, except perhaps as to the liability of a principal to reimburse his agent when the latter has paid it because in honor bound.

Ne weatour non with hym thou lay, Ne at the dyces with hym to play.

Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 306.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Shak., T. of the S., v. 2. 69.

A wager is a promise to pay money, or transfer property, upon the determination or ascertainment of an uncertain event; the consideration for such a promise is either a present payment or transfer by the other party, or a promise to pay or transfer upon the event determining in a particular way.

Anson, Contr., 166.

3. The act of betting; a bet.

We'll make a solemn wager on your cunning.

Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 156.

4. That on which bets are laid; the subject of a bet. [Rare.]

The sea strave with the winds which should bee louder, and the shrouds of the ship, with a gustful noise to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the other's contention.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, II.

5. In old Eng. law, an offer to make oath of innocence or non-indebtedness; also, the act of making such oath, the oaths of eleven compurgators being conjoined as fortifying the defendant's oath. — Wager of battle or battel. See *battle*¹.

— Wager of law, an old English mode of trial, whereby in an action of debt brought upon a simple contract between the parties, without any deed or record, the defendant might discharge himself by taking an oath that he did not owe the plaintiff anything. He was required, however, to bring with him eleven of his neighbors, called compurgators, who were to avow upon their oath that they believed in their consciences that he declared the truth. — Wager policy. See *policy*².

wager (wāj'jēr), v. [wager, n.] I. trans. 1. To hazard on the issue of a contest, or on some question that is to be decided, or on some casualty; bet; lay; stake.

Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 182.

"What will you wager, Wise William?"

"My lands I'll wad with thee."

Reedisdale and Wise William (Child's Ballads, VIII. 88).

2. To make a wager on; bet on: followed by a clause as object: as, I wager you are wrong.

We have a maid in Mytilene, I durst wager, Would win some words of him.

Shak., Pericles, v. 1. 43.

II. intrans. To make a bet; offer a wager.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence, . . . bring you in fine together, And wager on your heads.

Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 135.

But one to wager with, I would lay odds now, He tells me instantly.

B. Jonson, Volpone, iv. 1.

wager-cup (wāj'jēr-kup), n. An ornamental piece of plate used as a prize for a race or similar contest.

wagerer (wāj'jēr-ēr), n. [wager + *-er*¹.] One who wagers or lays a bet.

Wagnerian (väg'nér-i-an), n. [< Wagner (see def.) + -ian.] The G. surname Wagner is from the noun wagner, a wagon-maker, cartwright, = E. wagner.] Of or pertaining to any one named Wagner. Specifically—(a) Of or pertaining to Rudolph Wagner (1806–64), a German anatomist and physiologist. (b) Pertaining to or relating to Richard Wagner (1813–83), a celebrated German musical composer, or to his music-dramas: characterized by the ideas or the style of Wagner. See Wagnerism. — Wagnerian corpuscles, the tactile corpuscles of Wagner. See corpuscle. — Wagnerian spot, the germinal spot. See nucleolus, 1.

Wagnerianism (väg'nér-i-an-izm), n. [< Wagnerian + -ism.] Wagnerism. Contemporary Rev., LI. 448.

Wagnerism (väg'nér-izm), n. [< Wagner + -ism.] 1. The art theory of Richard Wagner, especially as concerns the musical drama, including the general style of composition based on that theory. Among the many characteristics of the theory are these: the choice of a general subject in which the mythical and heroic elements are prominent; the amalgamation of poetry, music, action, and scenic effect into the most intimate union as equally important cooperating elements; the desertion of the conventionalities of the common Italian opera, especially of its sharply defined and contrasted movements and its tendency to the display of mere virtuosity; the abundant use of leading motives as a means to continuous and reiterated emotional effect; the immense elaboration of the orchestral parts, so that in them is furnished an unbroken presentation of or commentary on the entire plot; and the free use of new and remarkable means of effect, both scenic and instrumental. The Wagnerian ideal is often called (sometimes derisively) "the music of the future," from the title of one of Wagner's essays. While Wagnerism is best exemplified in the great dramas of Wagner himself, its qualities may be seen more or less in almost all the dramatic music of the last half of this century.

2. The study or imitation of the music of Richard Wagner.

Wagnerist (väg'nér-ist), n. [< Wagner + -ist.] An adherent of Richard Wagner's musical methods; an admirer of his works. Also Wagnerite.

wagnerite¹ (wag'nér-it), n. [Named after F. M. von Wagner (1768–1851), head of the Bavarian mining department.] A transparent mineral having a vitreous luster, wine-yellow or honey-yellow in color. It is a fluophosphate of magnesium.

Wagnerite² (väg'nér-it), n. [< Wagner + -ite².] Same as Wagnerist. The American, XVII. 110.

wagon, waggon (wag'on), n. [Early mod. E. also in pl. waganes; < D. wagen, a wagon or wain, = AS. wægn, E. wain: see *wain*¹.] Hence F. wagon, a railroad-car.] 1. A four-wheeled vehicle; a wain; specifically, a four-wheeled vehicle designed for the transport of heavy loads, or (of lighter build) for various purposes of business, as the delivery of goods purchased at a shop, or of express packages; loosely, such a vehicle, similar to the lighter business wagons, used for pleasure. The typical heavy wagon is a strong vehicle drawn by two or three horses yoked abreast, the fore wheels much smaller than the hind pair, and their axle swiveled to the body of the wagon to facilitate turning.

They trussed all their harness in waganes.

wagon (wag'on), v. t. [*< wagon, *n.] To transport, convey, or carry in a wagon: as, to wagon goods. [Colloq.]

Burnside having answered for the safety of the road, it had been determined to wagon a portion of the [bridge] equipments to Fredericksburg.

Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), II. 563.

wagonage, waggonage (wag'on-ij), n. [< wagon + -age.] 1. Money paid for carriage or conveyance by wagon.

Wagonage, indeed, seems to the commissariat an article not worth economizing.

Jefferson, to Patrick Henry (Correspondence, I. 158).

2. A collection of wagons.

wagon-bed (wag'on-bed), n. Same as wagon-bor.

In the grassy piazza two men had a humble show of figs and cakes for sale in their wagon-beds.

Houells, The Century, XXX. 672.

wagon-boiler (wag'on-boi'lér), n. A kind of steam-boiler having originally a semicylindrical top, the ends and sides vertical, and the bottom flat, thus having the shape of a wagon covered with an arched tilt. Improved forms have the sides and bottom slightly curved inward.

wagon-bow (wag'on-bō), n. A bent slat of wood used, generally in combination with others, to support the top or cover of a wagon.

wagon-box (wag'on-boks), n. The part of a wagon mounted upon the wheels and axles, and used to contain the freight or passengers. Also wagon-bed.

wagon-brake (wag'on-brāk), n. A brake used on a wagon.

wagon-breast (wag'on-brest), n. In coal-mining, a breast in which the wagons or mine-cars are taken up to the working-face. Penn. Surv. Glossary.

wagon-ceiling (wag'on-sē'ling), n. A semicircular or wagon-headed ceiling; a wagon-vault. See wagon-headed.

wagon-coupling (wag'on-kup'ling), n. A coupling for connecting the fore and hind axles of a wagon. In a carriage it is also called reach or perch. E. H. Knight.

wagon-drag (wag'on-drag), n. Same as drag, 1 (h).

wagoner¹, waggoner (wag'on-ér), n. [= D. wagenaar, a wagoner, = OHG. waganari, a wagon-maker, MHG. wagner, G. wagner, wagon-maker, cartwright, driver; as wagon + -er¹.] 1. One who conducts or drives a wagon; a wagon-driver.

The waggoner . . . cracked his whip, re-awakened his music [bells], and went melodiously away.

Dickens, Black House, VI.

2^d. One who drives a chariot; a charioteer.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
 Towards Phœbus lodging; such a waggoner
 As Phaëthon would whip you to the west.

Shak., R. and J., III. 2. 2.

3. [cap.] The constellation Auriga. See Auriga.

By this the Northern waggoner had set His sevenfold team behind the steadfast starre
 That was in Ocean waves yet never wet.

Spenser, F. Q., I. II. 1.

wagoner² (wag'on-ér), n. An atlas of charts: a name formerly in use, derived from a work of this nature published at Leyden in 1584–5 by Wagenaar.

wagoner-book (wag'on-ér-bûk), n. Same as *wagoner*².

wagonesst, waggonessst (wag'on-es), n. [< wagon + -ess.] A female wagoner. [Rare.]

That she might serve for wagonesse, she pluck'd the waggoner hocks.

And up into his seate she mounts. Chapman, Iliad, v. 838.

wagonette, waggonette (wag-on-net'), n. [Also wagonet; < F. wagonet; as wagon + -ette.] A pleasure-vehicle, either with or without a top, holding six or more persons. It has at the back two seats facing each other, running lengthwise, and either one or two in front, running crosswise.

The . . . carriage . . . was of the wagonnette fashion, uncovered, with seats at each side.

Trollope, South Africa, I. xv.

wagon-hammer (wag'on-ham'ér), n. An upright bolt connecting the tongue and the doubletree of a vehicle. Upon it the doubletree swings. E. H. Knight.

wagon-headed (wag'on-hed'ed), a. Having a round-arched or semicylindrical top or head, like the cover or tilt of a wagon when stretched over the bows; round-arched: as, a wagon-headed roof or vault. — Wagon-headed ceiling, cylindrical or barrel vaulting, or a ceiling imitating the form of such vaulting.

wagon-hoist (wag'on-hoist), n. An elevator or lift used in livery-stables, carriage-factories, etc., to convey vehicles up or down.

wagon-jack (wag'on-jak), n. A lifting-jack for raising the wheels of a vehicle off the ground, so that they can be taken off for greasing, repairing, etc.

wagon-load (wag'on-lōd), n. The load carried by a wagon: as, a wagon-load of coal; hence, figuratively, a large amount: as, a very little text serves for a wagon-load of comment.

wagon-lock (wag'on-lok), n. In a vehicle, a device for retarding motion in going downhill. It operates as a brake by bringing a shoe to bear against the face of one rear wheel, or both. It differs essentially from a wagon-drag or wheel-drag used for the same purpose, the drag being a shoe placed under one of the wheels. A chain used to prevent a wheel from turning in descending a hill, by locking the wheel to the body of the wagon, is essentially a wagon-locking device, but the term in the United States always implies some form of friction hand-brake. Wagon-locks are used on stages and other vehicles in mountainous districts, and are preferred to the wheel-drag, as being easily managed from the driver's seat, without stopping the vehicle. See drag, 1 (b).

wagon-master (wag'ôn-más'tér), n. A person who has charge of one or more wagons; especially, an officer in charge of wagons in a military train.

wagon-roof (wag'ôn-rôf), n. A plain semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 93.

wagon-roofed (wag'ôn-rôft), a. Having a semicylindrical or wagon-headed roof or vault. See wagon-headed.

wagonry, waggonry (wag'ôn-ri), n. [< wagon + -ry; see -ry.] Conveyance by means of wagons; wagons collectively; wagonage. [Rare.]

He that sets to his hand though with a good intent to hinder the shogging of it, in this unlawful waggonry wherein to ride, let him beware it be not fatal to him as it was to Uzza. Milton, Church-Government, l. 1.

wagon-top (wag'ôn-top), n. The part of a locomotive-boiler, over the fire-box, which is elevated above the rest of the shell. Its purpose is to provide greater steam-room.

wagon-train (wag'ôn-trân), n. A train, service, or collection of wagons, draft-animals, etc., organized for a special purpose; especially, the collection of wagons, etc., accompanying an army, to convey provisions, ammunition, the sick and wounded, etc.

wagon-tree (wag'ôn-trê), n. [< wagon + tree; tr. D. wagen-boom.] A South African shrub, Protea grandiflora, growing 6 or 8 feet high, with the trunk as many inches thick. Its wood is of a reddish-brown color, beautifully marked with a cross or netted grain. It is sometimes used at the Cape of Good Hope for the felloes of wheels, plows, etc.

wagon-vault (wag'ôn-vôlt), n. A semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. See *vault*¹ and barrel-vault.

wagon-way (wag'ôn-wâ), n. In coal-mining, an underground horse-road. [North, Eng.]

wagonwright (wag'ôn-rit), n. [< wagon + wright. Cf. wainwright.] A mechanic who makes wagons.

Waine, a Woman that is Out-law'd; she is so called as being forsaken of the Law, and not an Out-law as a Man is. Glossographia Anglicana (1707).

waiver (wā'vēr), n. [Formerly also waver; < OF. waiver*, weyver, waive, refuse, renounce, inf. as noun: see waive.] In law: (a) The act of waiving; the intentional relinquishment of a known right; the passing by or declining to accept a thing.

Waiver, in a general way, may be said to occur wherever one, in possession of a right conferred either by law or by contract, and knowing the attendant facts, does or forbears to do something inconsistent with the existence of the right or of his intention to rely upon it; in which case he is said to have waived it, and he is estopped from claiming anything by reason of it afterward. Bishop.

The earliest conception . . . of public justice was a solemn waiver on the part of the community of its right and duty of protection in the case of one who had wronged his fellow-member of the folk. J. H. Green, Conq. of England, p. 23.

(b) In old Eng. law, the legal process by which a woman was waived, or put out of the protection of the law.

To life's delight, knows not of grief or care.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 171.

4. To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death; revive; reanimate.

To second life
Wak'd in the renovation of the just.
Milton, P. L., xi. 65.

The willows, waked from winter's death,
Give out a fragrance like thy breath.
Bryant, The Arctic Lover.

5. To disturb; break.

No murmur waked the solemn still,
Save tinkling of a fountain rill.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 26.

wake¹ (wāk), n. [< ME. wake, < AS. wacu*, wake or watch, in comp. nicht-wacu, a night-wake (= Icel. vaka = MLG. wake, watch), < wacan, wake: see wake, v. Hence, in comp., likewake, lichwake.] 1†. The act of waking, or the state of being awake; the state of not sleeping.

Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep
As is the difference betwixt day and night.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 219.

I have my desire, sir, to behold
That youth and shape which in my dreams and wakes
I have so oft contemplated.

B. Jonson, Staple of News, ii. 1.

2. The act of watching or keeping vigil, especially for a solemn or festive purpose; a vigil; specifically, an annual festival kept in commemoration of the completion and dedication of a parish church; hence, a merrymaking; a festive gathering. The wake was kept by an all-night watch in the church. Tents were erected in the churchyard to supply refreshments to the crowd on the following day, which was kept as a holiday. Through the large attendance from neighboring parishes at wakes, devotion and reverence gradually diminished, until they ultimately became mere fairs or markets, characterized by merry-making and often disgraced by indulgence and riot. In popular usage this word has the same meaning as vigil. The wake or revel of country parishes was, originally, the day of the week on which the church had been dedicated; afterward, the day of the year. In 1588 an act of convocation appointed that the wake should be held in every parish on the same day, namely, the first Sunday in October; but it was disregarded. Wakes are expressly mentioned in the "Book of Sports" of Charles I. among the feasts which should be observed. The wake appears to have been also held on the Sunday after the day of dedication; or, more usually, on the day of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. In Ireland it is called the patron day. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassalls, meetings, markets, fairs.

Didsbury Wakes will be celebrated on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of August [1825]. . . . The enjoyments consist chiefly of ass-races, for purses of gold; prison-bar playing, and grinning through collars, for ale; . . . and balls each evening.
Quoted in Hone's Year Book, col. 968.

3. An all-night watch by the body of the dead, before burial. This custom seems to be of Celtic origin, and is now characteristic of Ireland, or of the Irish in other countries; but it was formerly observed in Scotland and Wales. It probably originated from a superstition that the body might be carried off by invisible spirits, or from a more rational fear of injury to it from wild beasts. In early literature it has the name of likewake, lichwake. The wake was originally a combination of mourning for the dead and rejoicing in his memory and for his deliverance, but in later times has often degenerated into a scene of wild grief and gross orgies. See likewake.

How that the liche-wake was y-holde
At thilke night. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2100.

The late-wake is a ceremony used at funerals. The evening after the death of any person, the relations and friends of the deceased meet at the house, attended by a bagpipe or fiddle; the nearest of kin, be it wife, son, or daughter, opens a melancholy ball, dancing and greeting, i. e. crying violently, at the same time; and this continues till daylight, but with such gambols and frolics among the younger part of the company that the loss which occasioned them is often more than supplied by the consequences of that night. If the corpse remain unburied for two nights, the same rites are renewed.
Pennant, Tour in Scotland, p. 112.

wake² (wāk), n. [= D. wak, an opening in ice, < Icel. vök (vak-), a hole, opening in the ice, = Sw. vak = Norw. rok = Dan. vaage, an opening in ice; allied to Icel. vök, moist, rökva, moisten, water, > Sc. wak, moist, watery, = D. wak, moist; < Teut. wak*, wet, = Indo-Eur. wag*, L. umere, be moist, Gr. ὕψος, moist: see humid, humor, hygro, etc. Cf. fever: so called from Walcheren, an island of the Netherlands, where it at one time prevailed.
During the Walcheren expedition, in 1809, the English lost thousands of troops by a fever caused (as was believed) by the badness of the water, this loss leading to the entire failure of the expedition.

Walchia (wal'ki-š), n. A generic name given by Sternberg (in 1825) to a fossil plant very abundant in, and characteristic of, the Permian series. This plant belongs to the Coniferae, and has a close resemblance in its general appearance to the Arac- cariae; but, since its organs of fructification are unknown, its position has not as yet been exactly determined. It is in certain respects allied to Brachyphyllum and Pagio- phyllum, confers found in the Triassic and Jurassic.
Schenk (1884) makes a separate division (the Walchiae) of certain confers, in which he includes the genera Wal- chia, Ulmannia, and Pagiophyllum of Heer (Pachyphy- llum of Saprota). Ulmannia is also a characteristic plant of the Permian, being found in numerous localities in the Kupferschiefer; while Pagiophyllum occurs in the Trias of the United States, in various places in Europe in the Triassic and Jurassic, and in India in the Gondwana series.

Valdensian (see def.); < Waldenses + -ian.]
1. a. Of or pertaining to the Waldensians or Waldenses.

The important point of the origin of the Waldensian Church is clearly established, being referred to Waldo, in opposition to the fanciful theories which tried to carry it back through mysterious paths to the primitive Christian times.

The Academy, No. 898, p. 320.

II. n. A member of a reforming body of Christians, followers of Peter Waldo (Valdo) of Lyons, formed about 1170. Its chief seats were in the alpine valleys of Piedmont, Dauphiné, and Provence (hence the French name Valdois des Alpes, or Valdois). The Waldenses joined the Reformation movement, and were often severely persecuted, especially in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The Waldensian church in Italy now numbers about 20,000 members.

waldflute (wold'flūt), n. [< G. waldflöte, < wald- forest, + flöte, flute.] In organ-building, a flute-stop giving soft, but very resonant tones.

ania. See also cut under deltidium. King, 1849.

Waldheimiidae (wold-hi-mi'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., Waldheimia + -idae.] A family of arthropo-dous brachiopods, closely related to Torebra- tulidae, and by most naturalists combined with that family, but characterized by the elongated brachial appendages.

waldhorn (wold'hörn), n. [< wald, forest, + horn, horn; see wold¹ and horn¹.] The old hunting-horn, without valves, from which the modern orchestral or French horn was derived;
the corno di caccia. See horn.

Waldsteinia (wold-sti'ni-š), n. [NL. (Willdenow, 1799), named after Count Franz A. von Waldstein (1759-1823), a German botanist.] A genus of rosaceous plants, of the tribe Potentilleae.
It is characterized by flowers with numerous triseriate rigid persistent stamens, and two to six carpels, their styles not elongated. The 4 species are natives of central and eastern Europe, Siberia, and North America. They are herbs with creeping or stoloniferous stems, suggesting the strawberry-plant, bearing alternate long-petioled leaves, which are entire, cleft, or compound, sometimes with three to five crenate or incised leaflets, and large membranous stipules. The yellow flowers are borne, two to five together, on a bracted scape, often with curving pedicels. W. fragarioides is the barren strawberry of the United States, widely diffused through northern and mountainous parts of the Eastern and Central States.

wale¹ (wāl), n. [Also weal, improp. wheel; <

Old Pendennis . . . walked the new arrivals about the park and gardens, and showed them the carte du pays.

Thackeray, Pendennis, lvi.

5. To move, as a box or trunk, in a manner having some analogy to walking, partly by a rocking motion, and partly by turning the object on its resting-point in such manner that at each rocking movement an alternate point of support is employed, the last one used being always in advance of the previous one in the direction toward which the object is to be moved.—6. To send to or keep in a walk. See walk, n., 8 (b).

It is customary to send puppies out at three or four months of age to be kept by cottagers, butchers, small farmers, etc., at a weekly sum for each, which is called walking them. Dogs of Great Brit. and America, p. 197.

To walk one's chalks. See chalk.—To walk the chalk, to walk the chalk-mark, to keep straight in morals or manners: a figurative phrase, from the difficulty a drunken man has in walking upon a straight line chalked upon the floor by his comrades to test his degree of sobriety. Compare I, 5.—To walk the hospitals, to attend the medical and surgical practice of a general hospital, as a student, under one or more of the regular staff of physicians or surgeons attached to such a hospital.—Walking the plank. See plank.

walk (wāk), n. [< ME. walc, walk, < AS. ge-walec, a rolling, moving, = MHG. walc = Icel. vālka, a tossing; from the verb.] 1. Manner of action; course, as of life; way of living: as, a person's walk and conversation.

This is the melancholy walk he lives in,
And chooses ever to increase his sadness.

Fletcher, Double Marriage, IV. 3.

Oh for a closer walk with God!

Cowper, Olney Hymns, I.

2. Range or sphere of action; a department, as of art, science, or literature.

There are strong minds in every walk of life, that will rise superior to the disadvantages of situation.

A. Hamilton, The Federalist, XXXVI.

She [Mrs. Cibber] made some attempts lately in comedy, which were not, however, in any degree equal to her excellence in the opposite walk.

Life of Quin (reprint 1887), p. 40.

3. The act of walking for air or exercise; a stroll: as, a morning walk.

Make an early and long walk in goodness.

In pensive walk.

Burns, The Vision, II.

4. Manner of walking; gait; step; carriage.

Catherine . . . watched Miss Thorpe's progress down the street from the drawing-room window; admired the graceful spirit of her walk, the fashionable air of her figure and dress.

Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, IV.

5. The slowest gait of land-animals. In the walk of bipeds there is always one foot on the ground; in that of quadrupeds there are always two, and a part of the time three, feet on the ground. When very slow, or with heavy draft-animals when hauling, all four feet touch the ground at once for brief intervals. In the walk of ordinary quadrupeds the limbs move in diagonal pairs, the movement of the pair not being so nearly simultaneous as in Consecutive Positions of a Horse in Walking.

(After instantaneous photographs by Eadweard Muybridge.)

the trot, and varying much in this respect with the different degrees of speed and with the individual habits of the animal. Compare cut under run.

Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig.

Shak., T. N., I. 3. 138.

He stands erect; his slouch becomes a walk;

He steps right onward, martial in his air.

Cowper, Task, IV. 639.

6. A piece of ground fit to walk in; a place in which one is accustomed to walk; a haunt.

His walk

The fiery serpent fled and noxious worm.

Milton, P. R., I. 811.

We intend to lay ambushment in the Indian's walks, to cut off their men.

N. Thomas (Appendix to New England's Memorial, p. 480).

7. A place laid out or set apart for walking; an avenue; a promenade.

I saw a very goodly walks in Mantua roofed over and supported with thirty nine faire pillars.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 148.

Specifically—(a) An avenue set with trees or laid out in a grove or wood.

Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvollio's coming down this walk.

Your now walkable roads.

Swift, Letter to Sheridan, May 15, 1783.

walk-around (wák'á-round'), n. A comic dance in which the performer describes a large circle.

walker (wá'kér), n. [< ME. walker, < AS. wealcere (= OHG. walkari, MHG. walker, welker = Sw. walkare = Dan. walker), a fuller, < wealcen, roll, full: see walk. Hence the surname Walker, which has the same meaning as Fuller.] 1†. One who fulls cloth; a fuller.

And his cloths ben maad schynnyng and white ful moche as snow, and which manner cloths a fullere, or walkere of cloth, may not make white on erthe.

Wyclif, Mark ix. 2.

2. One who deports himself in a defined manner.

There is another sort of disorderly walkers who still keep amongst us.

Ep. Compton, Episcopalia, p. 66. (Latham.)

3. One who walks; a pedestrian: as, a fast walker.

Where the low Penthouse bows the Walker's head,
And the rough Pavement wounds the yielding Tread.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 158.

4. In Eng. forest law, an officer appointed to walk over a certain space for inspection; a forester.—5†. A prowler; one who goes about to do evil.

(b) A bird which belongs to the perching group, but which, when on the ground, advances by moving one foot after the other, instead of both together; a gradient or gressorial as distinguished from a saltatorial bird.—8. pl. In entom., the ambulatory orthopterous insects of the family Phasmidæ; the phasmids or walking-sticks. See Gressoria.—9†. That with which one walks; a foot; a leg.

And with them halted down (Proud of his strength) lame Muliber, his walkers quite misgown,
But made him tread exceeding sure.

Chapman, Illad, xx. 36.

Double walker, a fanciful name for an amphibian.—Walker or Hooker Walker! a slang ejaculation of incredulity uttered when a person tells a story which one believes to be false or "gammon." Various problematical explanations have been offered. [Slang, Eng.]

"Goand buyit [a prizeturkey]." "Walk-er!" exclaimed the boy.
"No, no," said Scrooge; "I am in earnest."

Dickens, Christmas Carol, v.

Walkers' clay, fullers' earth.—Walkers' earth, fullers' earth. The use of the word walker for fuller has now become obsolete in England, but a certain unctuous variety of fullers' earth found in the Lower Ludlow beds, in Wales, appears to be sometimes provincially designated both as walkers' earth and as dye-earth.

Walker cell. See cell, 8.

Walker tariff. See tariff.

walking-foot (wá'king-fút), n. A foot or leg fitted for walking; an ambulatory leg: in Crustacea, correlated with jaw-foot and swimming-foot. See cuts under Astacus and endopodite.

walking-leaf (wá'king-léf), n. 1. Same as walking-fern.—2. An orthopterous insect of the family Phasmidæ, belonging to Phyllium or some closely allied genus. The body is flat, the antennae are short, the legs have broad leaf-like expansions; the female wing-covers are large, and veined like leaves, which they closely resemble. The females are usually wingless, while the males generally possess large wings, but lack wing-covers or tegmina. Also called leaf-insect. See cut under Phyllium, and compare walking-stick, 2.

walking-staff (wá'king-stáf), n. A staff used for assistance in walking, especially such a staff longer than the ordinary walking-stick or cane.

walking-stick (wá'king-stik), n. 1. A stick prepared for use as an assistance in walking, differing from the staff (compare pilgrim's staff, under pilgrim, and bourdon) in being generally shorter and lighter. Walking-sticks were especially in fashion as part of the costume of a man of elegance toward the close of the seventeenth and in the eighteenth century. The length of 3 feet or somewhat less has generally been maintained, but temporary fashion has favored much longer ones, and at times has required them to be carried by women. They are sometimes carried so light and limber as to be rather for amusement and occupation of the hands than for support. Compare cane, 4.

2. Any one of the slender-bodied species of the gressorial orthopterous family Phasmidæ; a stick-bug; a specter. The common walking-stick of the eastern United States is Diapheromera femorata. See also cut under Phasma, and compare walking-leaf, 2.—Walking-stick palm. See palm, 2.

walking-straw (wá'king-strá), n. A kind of walking-stick, the large Diura or Cyphocera titan, 6 or 8 inches long, a native of New South Wales.

Aliterative Poems (ed. Morris), II. 1577.

wall (wál), n. [< ME. wal, walle, < AS. weal, weall, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone, = OS. wal = OFries. wal = D. wal = MHG. wal, G. wall = Sw. vall = Dan. vold, wall, = W. gwal, rampart, < L. vallum, an earthen wall or rampart set with palisades, a row or line of stakes, a wall, rampart, fortification. < vallus, stake, pale, palisade, circumvallation. From the same L. source are ult. E. vallate, vallation, circumvallation, etc. The native AS. word for 'wall' is wāh: see waw². The L. word for a defensive stone wall is murus: see mure¹.] 1. A work or structure of stone, brick, or other materials, serving to inclose a space, form a division, support superincumbent weight, or afford a defense, shelter, or security. Specifically—(a) One of the upright inclosing sides of a building or a room.

And the Helynge of here Housen, and the Woves and the Dores ben alle of Wode.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 247.

If the walls of their [Assyrian palaces'] apartments had not been wainscoted with alabaster slabs, we should never have been able to trace their form with anything like certainty.

J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 161.

(b) A solid and permanent inclosing fence of masonry, as around a field, a garden, a park, or a town.

2. A rampart; a fortified enceinte or barrier: often in the plural. See cuts under chemin-de-ronde, fortification, and retaining wall.

Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead.

Shak., Hen. V., III. 1. 2.

Walking-stick (Diapheromera femorata).

3. Something which resembles or suggests a wall: as, a wall of armed men; a wall of fire.

Within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor.
Shak., E. John, III. 3. 20.

Compass'd round by the blind wall of night.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

4. A defense; means of security or protection.
They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.
1 Sam., xv., 16.

5. In mining, one of the surfaces of rock between which the vein or lode is inclosed; the country, or country rock, adjacent to the vein. See vein. If the vein is, as is usually the case, inclined at an angle, the wall which is over the miner's head, or overhangs him, is called the hanging wall; that which is under him, the foot-wall. In coal-mining the rock adjacent to the bed of coal which is being worked is called the roof or the floor, according as it is above or beneath, and this is the case whether the strata be horizontal or inclined at an angle. The walls of a vein are called in some parts of England the cheeks.

6. In her., a bearing having some resemblance to a wall, usually embattled. It generally covers a large part of the escutcheon, and the line of division between it and the field may be bendwise, or bendwise sinister. It is, therefore, a division of the field by an embattled or crenelle line, the lower part being masoned, and having usually an arched doorway represented in it.

7. In anat. and zool., a paries; an extended investing or containing structure or part of the body: as, a cell-wall; the walls of the chest or abdomen: generally in the plural.—8. In corals, the proper outer investment of the visceral chamber, whether of a single corallum or of a single corallite of a compound corallum. Hard structures upon the inside of the wall are the endotheca; upon the outside, the exotheca. The condition of the wall varies greatly: it is pervious, as in the Perforata, or impervious, as in the Aporosa; smooth, or variously costate, striate, etc.; and it may be indistinguishably united with the coenenchyme, or replaced more or less completely by the epitheca.

9. Same as wall-knot.—Bridge wall. Same as bridge. n., 4.—Counterscarp, dwarf, grout wall. See the qualifying words.—Hanging wall. In mining, that wall of the vein or lode which is over the miner's head while he is working, the vein being supposed to have a decided underlay. The opposite wall is the foot-wall. If the vein is perfectly vertical, there is neither hanging wall nor foot-wall, and the two walls are then distinguished by reference to the points of the compass. Also called hanging side.—Head wall. See head.—Hollow wall, a double wall with a vacant space between the two faces.—Mask-wall. See mask.—Median partition, perpend wall. See the qualifying words.—Plinth of a wall. See plinth.—Retaining wall. See retaining.—Straight ends and walls. See straight.—The wall, the right or privilege of passing next the wall when encountering another person or persons in the street: a right valued in old-fashioned streets with narrow sidewalks or no footpath, as giving a safer or more cleanly passage: used also in the phrase to give or take the wall.

Spa. Signor Cavalero Danglerio, I must have the wall.
Eng. I do protest, hadst thou not enforced it, I had not regarded it; but since you will needs have the wall, I'll take the pains to thrust you into the kennel.

Heywood, If you know not me, I.

To drive to the wall. See drive.—To go to the wall, to be pushed to one side; succumb to rivals or to the pressure of circumstances.—To hang by the wall, to hang up neglected; hence, to remain unused.

All the enrolled penalties
Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall.
Shak., M. for M., I. 2. 171.

To push or thrust to the wall, to force to give place; crush by superior power.

Women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall.
Shak., R. and J., I. 1. 20.

To take the wall of. See the wall (above) and take.—Trapezoidal wall, a retaining wall, upright where it comes against the bank, but with a sloping face.—Vitrified wall. See vitrified.—Wall-barley. Same as squir-retail.—Wall-teeth. Same as molar teeth (which see, under tooth). (See also party-wall, training-wall.)

wall¹ (wál), v. t. [ME. wallen, wallen, wall, surround with walls.] 1. To inclose with a wall or as with a wall; furnish with walls: as, to wall a city.

Certes the Kyng of Thebes, Amphloun,
That with his syngynge walled that citee.
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 13.

This flesh which walls about our life.
Shak., Rich., II., III. 2. 167.

2. To defend by walls; fortify.
The terror of his name that walls us in From danger. Denham.

3. To obstruct or hinder as by a wall.
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight.
Shak., 1 Hen., VI., iv. 2. 24.

4. To fill up with a wall.
The ascent (to the mosque of Sultan Hassan) was by several steps, which are broken down, and the door wall'd up.
Poocoe, Description of the East, I. 81.

5. In Eng. university slang, same as gate.
To gate or wall a refractory student.
Macmillan's Mag., II. 222.

To wall a rope, to make a wall-knot on the end of a rope.

wall² (wál), n. [ME. walle, < AS. weall* (= OFries. walla), a well, < weallan, boil, well: see *wall*², v., and cf. *well*¹, n.] A spring of water. [Prov. Eng.] hym contened.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 238.

wallop (wol'op), v. t. [Origin obscure; perhaps a particular use of wallop 1. It is appar. confused with wale 1, whale 2. There is an absurd notion that the verb is derived from the name of Sir John Wallop, an ancestor of the Earl of Portsmouth, Knight of the Garter, who in Henry VIII.'s time distinguished himself by walloping the French.] 1. To castigate; beat soundly; drub; thrash. [Slang.]

My father is an engineer's labourer, and the first cause of my thieving was that he kept me without grub, and walloped me.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 468.

2. To tumble over; dash down. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.] wallop (wol'op), n. [< wallop 2, v.] A severe blow. [Slang.]

walloper (wol'op-ér), n. [< wallop 1 + -er 1.] A pot-walloper.

walloper (wol'op-ér), n. [Also walloper; < wallop 2 + -er 1.] One who or that which wallops. [Slang.]—Cod-walloper, a cod-fishing vessel. [Provincetown, Massachusetts.]

walloping (wol'op-ing), a. Great; bouncing. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.] wallow (wol'ô), v. [Early mod. E. also walow; < ME. walowen, walewen, walwen, welwen, wallow, < AS. weathrian, roll round, = Goth. wehjan, wallow, roll, = L. volvere, roll (whence ult. E. volute, volve, devolve, etc.).] 1. Intrans. 1. To roll; tumble about. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Mi witte is waste nowe in wede,
I walowe, I walke, nowe woo is me.
York Plays, p. 421.

He waletheth and he turneth to and fro.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 229.

There saw I our great galliasses tost
Upon the wallowing waves.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, II. 1.

Through the deep gulf of the chimney wide Wallows the Yule-log's roaring tide.
Lowell, Vision of Sir Launfal, II. Prolog.

2. To roll the body in sand, mire, water, or other yielding substance.

The fytche . . . foloweth them with equal pace although they make neuer such haste with full wynd and sailles, and walloweth on euery syde and about the shyppes.
R. Eden, tr. of Gonzalus Ouedius (First Booke on America, ed. Arber, p. 231).

Part huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean.
Milton, P. L., vii. 411.

The name of the slough was Despond. Here, therefore, they wallowed for a time, being grievously bedaubed with the dirt.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

3. To plunge into some course or condition; dwell with satisfaction in, addict one's self to, or remain in some way of life or habit, especially a sensual or vicious one.

Pale death oft spares the wretched wight:
And woundeth you, who wallow in delight.
G. Whetstone, Remembrance of Gascolgne.

II. trans. To roll.

He walewide a greet stoon to the dore of the biriel, and wente awel.
Wyclif, Mat. xxvii. 60.

These swine, that will not leave wallowing themselves in every mire and puddle.
Tyndale, Ana. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 276.

wallow¹ (wól'ô), n. [< wallow¹, v.] 1. The act of rolling or tumbling, as in sand or mire.

Wrothely thei wrythynne and wryttille to-gederz
With welters and wallowes over with-in these buskez.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1142.

2†. A rolling gut.

One taught the tows, and one the new French wallow;
His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed.
Dryden, Epil. to Etherege's Man of Mode.

3. A place to which an animal, as a buffalo, resorts to wallow; also, the traces of its wallowing left in the mire. Some localities called by this name (notably the "hog-wallows" of the San Joaquin Valley, in California) are on too large a scale to have been formed in this way. Their origin has not been satisfactorily explained.

They had come to an alkali mud-hole, an old buffalo-wallow, which had filled up and was covered with a sun-baked crust, that let them through as if they had stepped on a trap-door.
T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 658.

4. The alder-tree. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

wallow² (wól'ô), v. i. [< ME. wallowen, wolewen, welhen, weolewen, < AS. wealhian, wealowian, wealwian, fade; wither; perhaps ult. connected with welken, wither: see welk.] To fade away; wither; droop. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

The grond stud barrant, widdert dosk or gray,
Herbis, flowris, and gersais wallowyt away.
Gavin Douglas.

She had na read a word but twa,
Till she wallowt like a lily.
Geordie (Child's Ballads, VIII. 98).

wallow³ (wól'ô), a. [Also Sc. wauch, waugh; < ME. walow, walwehe, wallh, < Icel. vâlgr, lukewarm, insipid. Cf. D. walig, disgust, aversion (> walgen, loathe, turn the stomach.)] Insipid; tasteless. [Prov. Eng.] wallower (wól'ô-er), n. [< wallow¹ + -er.] 1. One who or that which wallows.

Lo, huge heaps of gold,
And to and fro amidst them a mighty Serpent rolled:
. . . I knew that the Worm was Fafnir, the Wallower on the Gold.
William Morris, Sigurd, II.

2. In mech., same as lantern-wheel.

wallowing (wól'ô-ing), n. [< ME. welwynge, welowynge; verbal n. of wallow¹, v.] The act of rolling, as in mire.

wallowish (wól'ô-ish), a. [Early mod. E. also walowish, also contr. walsh; < wallow³ + -ish.] Insipid; flat; nauseous. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

In Persia are kine; . . . their milke is walowish sweet.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 400.

Ponelle [F.], the Assyrian citron, a fruit as big as two lemons, and of a verie good smell, but of a faint-sweet or walowish taste.
Cotgrave.

As unwelcome to any true conceit as sluttish morsels or walowish potions to a nice stomach.
Sir T. Overbury, Characters, A Dunce.

wall-painting (wál'pán'ting), n. 1. The painting of the surface of a wall, or of kindred surfaces, with ornamental designs or figure-subjects, as a decoration. Such painting is usually classified as encaustic or as fresco or tempera painting.—2. An example or work of painting of this kind.

wall-paper (wál'pá'pér), n. Paper, usually decorated in color, used for pasting on walls or ceilings of rooms; paper-hangings. Modern wall-papers are printed from blocks by hand or in color-printing machines. A great variety of styles are now used, including plain papers in single colors, striped patterns, geometrical patterns, and arabesque, flower, pictorial and conventional, and even comic designs. Large pictorial papers, with life-sized figures, were popular fifty years ago, and are still made in limited quantities. The styles also include a variety of surface-effects, as satin-finish, flock-papers, and watered, embossed, and stamped patterns. Gliding and bronzing are also largely used. Cartridge-papers are thick, heavy papers in single colors.

Japanese papers include imitations of crepe and leather, either plain, gilded, or in patterns. Veneers of wood pasted on paper also are used.

wall-pellitory (wál'pel'i-tô-ri), n. A plant, Parietaria officinalis, with a diuretic and refrigerant property, considerably used in continental Europe, especially in domestic practice. See pellitory.

wall-pennywort (wál'pen'i-wért), n. See pennywort (a).

wall-pepper (wál'pép'ér), n. The stonecrop, Sedum acre, an intensely acrid plant formerly used as a remedy in scorbutic diseases. See stonecrop.

wall-pie (wál'pí), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-piece (wál'pés), n. A piece of artillery prepared for mounting on the wall of a fortress, as distinguished from one intended for transportation from place to place; especially, of ancient firearms, a light gun, a long musket, or the like, mounted on a swivel.

As muzzle-loaders, wall-pieces, on account of the length of their barrels, were most difficult to load, so that we find more breech-loading wall-pieces than early breech-loading small-arms.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 91.

wall-plat (wál'plat), n. 1. Same as wall-bird. —2. Same as wall-plate, 1. Halliwel.

wall-plate (wál'plát), n. 1. In building, a timber placed horizontally in or on a wall, under the ends of girders, joists, and other timbers. Its function is to insure even distribution of pressures, and to bind the wall together. The wall-plate of a roof of circular or elliptical plan is called a curb-plate. See cuts under plate, 7, and roof.

2. In mining, one of the two long pieces of timber which with two short ones (end pieces) make up a set in the timbering of a shaft. The sets are usually from 5 to 6 feet apart, and are themselves supported by the studdles in the corners of the shaft.

3. In mach., a vertical plate at the back of a plumber-block bracket, for attaching it to a wall or post. E. H. Knight.—4. A plaque, like that of a sconce; especially, a mirror from the face of which projects the bracket or arm supporting a candle.

wall-pocket (wál'pok'et), n. A flat pouch or receptacle for newspapers or other articles, designed to be hung upon the wall of a room.

wall-rib (wál'rib), n. In medieval vaulting, a common English name for the longitudinal rib at one end of a vaulting-compartment; an arc formeret. In the fully developed style there is no wall at the ends of the compartments, but a window filling the whole space; one of the other names is therefore to be preferred to that of wall-rib.

wall-rock (wál'rok), n. In mining, the rock forming the walls of a vein; the country-rock.

wall-rocket (wál'rok'et), n. See *rocket*².

wall-rue (wál'rô), n. A small delicate fern, Asplenium Ruta-muraria, growing on walls and cliffs. Also called rue-fern, wall-pie, tentwort, and wall-rue spleenwort.

wall-salt-peter (wál'sált-pē'tér), n. Nitrocalsite.

wall-scraper (wál'skráp'ér), n. A chisel-edged tool for scraping down walls preparatory to papering.

Wallsend (wálz'end), n. A variety of English coal extensively used in London: so called because originally dug at Wallsend on the Tyne, close to the spot where the Roman Wall ended.

It is of very superior quality for household use, and is mined in the district extending from the Tyne to the Wear, and from the Wear to Castle Eden, and in another area about Bishop Auckland. The most important coal in the Newcastle district is the "High main" or "Wallsend" Seam. It is the highest workable coal, and varies from 5 to 6 feet in thickness.
Hull, Coal-Fields of Gt. Brit., 4th ed., p. 274.

wall-sided (wál'sí'ded), a. Having sides nearly perpendicular, as a ship: opposed to tumble-home.

wall-space (wál'spás), n. In arch., an expanse of wall unbroken by architectural features or ornaments; especially, such an expanse considered as a feature of design, or as a field for decoration in painting, or of any other nature.

wall-spleenwort (wál'splén'wért), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-spring (wál'spring), n. A spring of water issuing from stratified rocks.

wall-tent (wál'tent), n. See *tent*¹.

wall-tooth (wál'tóth), n. A large double tooth. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] wall-tower (wál'tou'ér), n. A tower built in connection with or forming an essential part of a wall; especially one of the series of towers which strengthened the mural fortifications of former times, from remote antiquity until the advance of artillery compelled the modification of military engineering. See also cut under castle.

wall-tree (wál'tré), n. In hort., a fruit-tree trained upon a wall for the better exposure of the fruit to the sun, for utilizing the radiation of the heat of the wall, and for protection from high winds.

wall-vase (wál'väs), n. In Oriental decorative art, a small vase, having one side flat, and with a hole near the top by which it can be hung upon the wall. In some cases the form is that of half an ordinary vase having a surface of revolution; but sometimes the form is specially fitted to its purpose, irregular, or even fantastic, and may be suggested by a draped figure.

wall-washer (wál'wosh'ér), n. A plate on the end of a tie-rod or tension-rod, and in contact with the face of the wall strengthened or supported by the rod. These washers are named from their shape: as, bonnet-washer, S-washer, star-washer. E. H. Knight.

wall-wasp (wál'wosp), n. A wasp that makes its nest in walls; specifically, Odynerus murarius.

wall-wight, a. Same as wale-wight.

Turn four-and-twenty wall-wight men,
Like storks, in feathers gray.
The Earl of Mar's Daughter (Child's Ballads, I. 176).

wallwort (wál'wért), n. [< ME. walworte, walwurt, wallwort, < AS. wealwyr, < weall, wall, + wyr, wort.] The dwarf elder, or danewort, Sambucus Ebulus; sometimes, also, the wall-pellitory, Parietaria officinalis; the stonecrop, Sedum acre; and the navelwort, Cotyledon Umbilicus.

wally¹ (wól'i), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To cocker; indulge. [Prov. Eng.] wally² (wól'i), interj. Same as waly². [Provincial.] —Wally fa' you! ill luck befall you!

Wally fa' you, Willie,
That ye could nae prove a man.
Eppie Morris (Child's Ballads, VI. 262).

wallydraigle, wallydraggie (wól'i-drä-gl.-drag-l), n. The youngest of a family; a bird in the nest; hence, any feeble, ill-grown creature. Ramsay. [Scotch.] walmt, n. [*ME. walm, < AS. wealm, wælm (= OHG. walm), lit. a boiling up, < weallan, boil, gush forth, as water: see wall², wall¹.] A bubble in boiling.

With vij. walmes that are so falle,
Hote sprynging out of helle.
MS. Cantab. Fl. II. 98, l. 187. (Halliwel.)

walmt, v. t. [< ME. walmen, welmen, boil; < walm, n.] To rise; boil up; bubble.

The wikkid werchings that walmed in her dales,
And zit wolle here-after but wisdom it lette.
Richard the Redeless, III. 114.

walnut, n. A Middle English form of walnut. walnut (wál'nút), n. [Formerly also walnut, walnutte; *< ME. walnot, walnote, < AS. wealh-hnutu, walh-hnutu (= MD. walnote, D. walnoot = G. walnuss = Icel. valnöt = Sw. valnöt = Dan. valnød), lit. 'foreign nut' (so called with ref. to Italy and France, whence the nut was first brought to the Germans and English), < wealh, foreign (see Welsh), + hnutu, nut. Cf.

walnut. 1. The fruit of the nut-bearing tree Juglans regia; also, the tree itself, or its wood. The walnut-tree is native from the Caucasus and Armenia to the mountains of northern India, and is extensively cultivated, and in some places naturalized, in temperate Europe. It grows from 40 to 60 or even 100 feet high, with a massive trunk and broad spreading top, and bears pinnate leaves with few smooth leaflets. It produces the well-known sweet-seeded nuts of this name, in America distinguished as English walnuts. These are surrounded with a thin, brittle, and easily separated husk. The shell is thin in different degrees, or in the wild state thicker. The kernel yields some 50 per cent. of oil, which is largely expressed in France and other parts of Europe, as also in Asia. That of the first pressing is used for food, like olive-oil, though ranked less highly; that of the second pressing, called fire-drawn, the cake having been submitted to boiling water, is more siccative even than linseed-oil, and hence is by some artists the most highly esteemed of all oils; it is a good lamp-oil, and is available for making soft-soap, etc. The whole fruit when quite young makes a good pickle. The shell of a large variety, called double walnut, is used in France for making purses, cases for jewelry, etc. The leaves and the hull of the fruit are used in Europe for various medicinal purposes. Walnut-wood is light, tough, and handsome, plain or with a bur; before the introduction of mahogany it was the leading cabinet-wood of Europe, and is still preferred to all other wood for gunstocks.

As on a walnut with-out is a bitter bark.

Piers Plowman (B), xi. 251.

I observed . . . many goodly rows of wall nutte trees.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 25.

2. In the United States, frequently, same as black walnut and rock-walnut (the fruit, the tree, or its wood). See below.—3. In parts of New York, New England, and some other localities, same as hickory-nut or hickory. This is sometimes distinguished as shagbark or shell-bark walnut.—Ash-leaved walnut. Same as Caucasian walnut.—Belgaum walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Black walnut, a North American tree, Juglans nigra, or its timber. The tree ranges, in rich bottom-lands and on hillsides, through a large part of the eastern half of the United States, but is becoming scarce. It grows from 90 to 140 feet high, with a trunk from 6 to 9 feet in diameter. The wood is heavy, hard, and strong, easily worked, and susceptible of a beautiful polish; it is purplish-brown when first cut, but becomes darker with age. It is more generally used for cabinet-making, inside finish, and gunstocks than any other North American tree. (Sargent.) The nuts are edible, but not very choice; the shell is hard, the husk thick and difficult to remove. The tree grows rapidly, and is more or less planted on the prairies.

They have a sort of walnut they call black walnuts, which are as big again as any I ever saw in England, but are very rank and oily, having a thick, hard, foul shell, and come not clear of the husk as the walnut in France doth; but the inside of the nut, and leaves, and growing of the tree declare it to be of the walnut kind.

Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 14.

Caucasian walnut, the tree Pterocarya (Juglans) fraxinifolia, marked by its two-winged fruit.—Country walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Double walnut. See def. 1.—English walnut, European walnut. See def. 1.—Highlander walnut, a variety of the common walnut, said to be the best in England.—Indian walnut, the candleberry, Aleurites Molluccana (A. triloba). Also called Belgaum, country, and Otaheite walnut.—Jamaica walnut, a low West Indian tree, Pterodendron Juglans, bearing a small ovoid-globose orange-yellow fruit.—Lemon walnut. See lemon-walnut.—Otaheite walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Rock-walnut, a moderate or small tree, Juglans rupestris, found from Texas—where it is generally reduced to a low much-branched shrub—to California, growing along streams and in mountain cañons. Its wood is of a dark-brown color, susceptible of polish. Its nuts are small, sweet, and edible.—Shagbark or shellbark walnut. See def. 3.—Titmouse walnut, a variety of the common walnut with a shell so thin as to be broken by the titmouse and other birds.—Walnut case-bearer, an American phytoid moth, Acerobasis juglandis, whose small green larva constructs a black case between the leaves of the walnut.—Walnut catchup. See catchup.—Walnut leaf-roller, either of two tortricid moths, Tortrix rileyana and Lophodera juglandana, whose larva roll the leaves of walnut and hickory in the United States. See cut under Tortrix.—Walnut sword-tail, a dull-brown tree-hopper, Urosiphis caryae, occurring on the foliage of walnut and hickory in the United States.—White walnut, the butternut, Juglans cinerea, sometimes called oil-nut and lemon-walnut.

walnut-moth (wál'nut-móth), n. Any moth whose larva feeds on walnut, as the regal walnut-moth, Citheronia regalis, whose larva is known as the hickory horned devil. See cut under regal.

walnut-oil (wál'nut-oil), n. See walnut, 1.

walnut-scale (wál'nut-skál), n. Aspidiotus juglans-regie, a flat gray scale-insect found on the bark of the larger limbs of walnut in the United States.

walnut-sphinx (wál'nut-sfíngks), n. See sphinx.

walnut-tree (wál'nut-tré), n. See walnut.

walpurge (wol-pér'jin), n. Same as walpur-gite.

Walpurgis night (vål-pör'gis nít). [G. Walpurgis nacht, so called with ref. to the day of St. Walpurgis, Walburgis, or Walpurga, the name of an abbess who emigrated from England to Germany in the 8th century.] The night before the first day of May, on which, according to German popular superstition, witches are said to ride on broomsticks, he-goats, etc., to some appointed rendezvous, especially the Brocken in the Harz Mountains, where they hold high festival with their master the devil.

walpurge (wol-pér'jit), n. A hydrated arsenate of uranium and bismuth, occurring in thin scale-like crystals of a yellow color. It is found with other uranium minerals at Neustädtel in Saxony. Also walpurge.

walrus (wól'rus), n. [= D. walrus = G. walross, < Sw. walross = Dan. hvalross, lit. 'whale-horse', equiv. to Icel. hross-hvalr = AS. hross-hwæl, lit. 'horse-whale', a name prob. alluding to the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh, = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk: see whale and horse. Cf. whalefish and narwhal.] Any member of the family Trichechidae (or Rosmaridae); a very large pinniped carnivorous mammal, related to the seals, having in the male enormous canine teeth protruding like tusks from the upper jaw. The common walrus, T. rosmarus, the morse, sea-horse, sea-ox, or sea-cow, attains a total length of 10 to 12 feet in the full-grown male; individuals are reported to exceed 14 feet; a more nearly average length is 8 to 10 feet, with a girth of about as much. A weight of 2,500 to 3,000 pounds is acquired by old bulls, with a yield of 600 pounds of blubber. The whole length of the canines is about 2 feet, when they are full-grown, with a projection of 15 inches or more. These teeth are used in digging for the clams which form the principal food of the animal, and in climbing over uneven surfaces of rock or ice. A walrus 12 feet long has the fore flippers 2 feet long by about 1 foot broad; the flukes each about this length, but 2½ feet in extreme breadth when pressed out flat. The mammae of the female are two pairs, respectively abdominal and inguinal. Young and middle-aged individuals of both sexes are covered with a short coarse hair of a yellowish-brown color, deepening into dark reddish-brown on the belly and at the bases of the limbs. Old animals, especially the bulls, become almost naked, and the skin grows heavily wrinkled and plated, especially on the fore quarters. In the glacial period the walrus ranged in North America southward on the Atlantic coast to South Carolina. There is no evidence of its existence in New England since about 1550; from this date to 1600 it lived south to Nova Scotia. It now inhabits some parts of Labrador, shores of Hudson's Bay, Greenland, and arctic regions as far north as Eskimos live or explorers have gone. It has been found in Scotland of late years, and on or off the arctic coasts of Europe and Asia, especially in Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. It is readily captured, and the systematic destruction to which it has long been subjected has materially diminished its numbers in many different places. The blubber yields a valuable oil; from the hide a very tough and durable leather is made; and the tusks yield a superior ivory. The walrus of the North Pacific is now generally thought to be specifically distinct, and is known as T. or K. obesus, and Pacific or Cook's Walrus (Trichechus or Rosmarus obesus).

Cook's walrus. It attains even greater size and weight than the common morse, and the hide is extremely rough. See also cuts under tusk and rosmarus.

walrus-bird (wól'rus-bérd), n. [Translation of the Eskimo name.] The pectoral sandpiper, Tringa (Actodromas) maculata: so called from its puffing out its breast like a walrus during the breeding-season. See cut under sandpiper. [Recent.]

walsh (wólsh), a. Same as wallowish.

Walsh, a. and n. An obsolete form of Welsh. It survives in the surname Walsh.

Walshia (wól'shi-á), n. [NL. (Clemens, 1864), named after B. D. Walsh (1808-69), an American entomologist.] A curious genus of moths, of the family Tineidae, having the fore wings with large thick tufts of scales, and the submedian and internal nervures obsolete. Only one species, W. amorphella, is known. Its larva makes a gall on the stems of the false indigo, Amorpha fruticosa, and the walts (wálts), n. [= F. valse (> E. valse), < G. walzer, a round dance, waltz, < walzen, roll: see walt, v.] 1. A round dance, probably of Bohemian origin, which has been extraordinarily popular since the latter part of the eighteenth century. It is danced by couples, the partners in each couple moving together in a series of whirling steps—either advancing continuously in the same direction, or varying this with "reversing" or turning the opposite way. The regular form of the waltz is known as the trois-temps—the more rapid form deux-temps containing six steps to every two of the other. The derivation of the waltz is disputed, the French often claiming its descent from the volta, and the Germans from the allemande; but it is probably a development of the slow and simpleändler. Its popularity has decidedly overshadowed that of all other fashionable dances.

J. Pierpont, in C. Mather's Mag. Chris., I. vi.

2. Music for such a dance, or in its rhythm, which is triple and moderately quick. Waltzes are usually made up of sections of eight or sixteen measures. Several such sections are often written to be performed in succession, and are then provided with an introduction and a coda.—Deux-temps waltz. See deux-temps.

waltz (wálts), v. i. [< waltz, n.] 1. To dance a waltz, or in the movement or step of a waltz.

Some waltz, some draw, some fathom the abyss Of metaphysics.
Byron, Don Juan, xli. 52.

2. To move lightly or trippingly or swiftly as in a waltz: as, the young people waltzed into the room. [Slang.] waltzer (wálts'ér), n. [< waltz + -er]. A person who waltzes.

It may be said, without vanity, that I was an apt pupil, and . . . in a single week I became an expert waltzer.
Thackeray, Fitz-Bodley's Confessions, Dorothea.

walnewite (wál'ū-īt), n. [Named from P. A. Walnew, a Russian.] A variety of xanthophyllite, occurring in tabular crystals of a dull-green color. It is found in the Zlatoust mining region in the Urals.

waly¹, walie (wá'li), a. and n. [An extension of *wale*², a., perhaps mixed with ME. wely, weli, < AS. weli, rich, wealthy, < wcl, well; see *well*².] 1. a. 1. Beautiful; excellent.

I think them a' sae braw and walie.
But Tam kenn'd what was what fu' brawlie;
There was ae winsome wench and walie.
Hamilton.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

2. Large; ample; strong; robust.

This waly boy will be na coof.
Burns, There was a Lad.

II. n.; pl. walties (-liz). Something pretty; an ornament; a toy; a gewgaw.

Baith lads and lassies busked brawly
To glower at ilka bonny waly.
Ramsey, Poems, II. 538. (Jantson.)

[Scotch in all senses.]

waly² (wá'li), interj. [An abbr. var. of wella-way.] An interjection expressive of lamentation; alas! [Obsolete or Scotch.]

O waly, waly up the bank,
And waly, waly down the brae,
And waly, waly you burn side,
Where I and my love went to gae.
Waly, Waly, but Love be Bonny (Child's Ballads, IV. 133).

wamara (wá'ma-ri), n. [Native name.] The brown ebony of British Guiana. See ebony.

wamble (wom'bl), v. i.: pret. and pp. wambled, pp. wambling. [Also dial. wammel, wammle; < ME. wamlen, < Dan. wamle, feel nausea (cf. wammel, maukish); freq. of the verb seen in Icel. vænna = Sw. vänjas, refl., loathe, nauseate.] 1. To rumble, heave, or be disturbed with nausea: said of the stomach.

What availeth to haue good meate, when onely the sight thereof moueth backes, and makes the stomach wamble?
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Helwiese, 1577), p. 182.

Some sighing elegie must ring his knell,
Unless bright sunshine of thy grace revive
His wambling stomach.
Marston, Scourge of Villany, viii.

2. To rumble; ferment, and make a disturbance.

And your cold sallads, without salt or vinegar,
Lie wambling in your stomachs.
Fletcher, Mad Lover, i. 1.

[Obsolete or provincial in both uses.] wamble (wom'bl), n. [< wamble, v.] A rumbling, heaving, or similar disturbance in the stomach; a feeling of nausea. [Obsolete or provincial.]

Our meat going down into the stomach merrily, and with ted jacket resembling a cardigan. [Southern and western U. S.]

This [wagon-spoke] he put into the baggy part of his wamus, or hunting-jacket—the part above the belt into which he had often thrust prairie-chickens when he had no game bag.
E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xxviii.

wamp (womp), n. [Supposed to be < Massachusetts Ind. wompi, white; see wampum.] The American eider-duck: so called from the appearance of the drake. [Massachusetts.] wampee (wom-pé'), n. [Also whampee; Chinese, < hwang, yellow, + pí, skin.] 1. The fruit of a tree, Clausena Wampi, of the Rutaceæ, tribe Aurantieæ, thus allied to the orange. The native country of the tree is unknown, but it is cultivated in China, India, and Malaya for the fruit, which is borne in clusters, and is of the size and somewhat the taste of a grape, with an additional pleasant flavor of its own. The tree is of a sweet terebinthine odor, its leaves pinnate with five to nine smooth and shining leaflets.

2. See Pontederia.

wampish (wom'pish), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To toss about in a threatening, boasting, or frantic manner; wave violently; brandish; flourish. [Scotch.] wampum (wom'pum), n. [Formerly also wampom, wampame, wompam; *< Amer. Ind. wampum, wompam, < Massachusetts Ind. wompi, Delaware wapi, white.] Small shell beads pierced and strung, used as money and for ornament by the North American Indians. The shell was cut away, leaving only a cylinder like a European bugle. Wampum was of two kinds, white and black or dark-purple. An imitation of wampum consisting of white porcelain beads of the same shape has been made by Europeans for sale to the Indians. See the second quotation under wampumpeg.

Ye said Nariganets . . . should pay . . . 2000 fathom of good white wampum.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 437.

Sachems of Long Island came voluntarily, and brought a tribute to us of twenty fathom of wampum, each of them.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 283.

The Indians are ignorant of Europe's Coyne; yet they have given a name to ours, and call it monésh from the English money. Their own is of two sorts: one white, which they make of the stem or stock of the Periwinkle, which they call Meteahhook, when all the shell is broken off: and of this sort six of their small Beads (which they make with holes to string the bracelets) are current with the English for a Penny. The second is black, inclining to blew, which is made of the shell of a fish, which some English call Hens, Poquahock, and of this sort three make an English penny. . . . This one fathom of this strung money, now worth of the English but five shillings (sometimes more), some few yeeres since was worth nine, and sometimes ten shillings per Fathom. . . . Obs: Their white they call Wompam (which signifies white): their black Suckanhook (Sácki signifying black). Both amongst themselves, as also the English and Dutch, the blacke peny is two pence white.

Roger Williams, Key to Amer. Lang., xlv.

Striped wampum, a kind of wampum-snake, Ahaoterptrythogrammus of North America.

wampumpeg (wom'pum-pég), n. [Amer. Ind., < wompam, white, + peg, strung beads.] Strings of (originally white) wampum formerly used as tokens of value by the American Indians, and by the whites, especially in trade with the Indians.

He gave to the governour a good quantity of wampum-peague.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 143.

There was no currency, before this time, . . . unless we chose to give the name of currency to the wampum, or wampumpeg (as it is more properly called), of the Indians. . . . Penge was the name of the substance, which was of two kinds—black and white. Wampum, or wompum, is the Indian word for white, and as the white-kind was the most common, wampumpeg got to be the common name of this substance, which was usually abbreviated into wampum. The black peg consisted of the small round spot in the inside of the shell, which is still usually called in this neighborhood by its Indian name of quahog. These round pieces were broken away from the rest of the shell, brought to a smooth and regular shape, drilled through the center, and strung on threads. The white peg was the twisted end of several small shells, broken off from the main part. These portions of shell, thus strung, were worn as bracelets and necklaces, and wrought into belts of curious workmanship. They thus possessed an intrinsic value with the natives, for the purposes of ornament; and they were readily taken by them in exchange for their furs.
E. Everett, Orations, I. 124.

wampum-snake (wom'pum-snák), n. The red-bellied snake, Farancia abacura, a harmless colubrine serpent of the United States. See cut under Farancia.

wamsutta (wom-sut'á), n. Cotton cloth made at the Wamsutta Mills, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

wamus (wám'us), n. Same as wammas.

wan¹ (won), a. [< ME. wanne, < AS. wann, wonn, dark, black, lurid (as an epithet of the raven, the sea, flame, night, also of shadows, ornaments, clothes, etc.): connections uncertain. According to some, orig. 'deficient,' sc. in color, and so connected with AS. wan, deficient: see wan and *wane*², *wane*². But cf. W. gwan, Bret. gwan = Ir. Gael. fann, faint, feeble. According to others (a view highly improbable), orig. 'worn out with toil, tired out,' < AS. winnan (pret. wan, won), strive, fight: see win.] 1. Dark; black; gloomy: applied to the weather, to water, streams, pools, etc.

There leuit thay lakke, and the laund past:
Flor the wedur so wete, and the wan showers.

There is no worship in weping, ne in wan teres;
But desyre thi redresse all with derfe strokis.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 3602.

4†. Frightful; awful; great.

Then come thail to Calcas the cause forto wete,
Of the wedur so wikkid, and the wan stormys.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 12070.

=Syn. 2. Pallid, etc. (see *pale*²), ashy, cadaverous.

wan¹ (won), v.: pret. and pp. wanned, pp. wanning. [*< wan*¹, a.] 1. trans. To render wan.

II. intrans. To grow or become wan.

All his visage wann'd.
Shak., Hamlet, II. 2. 580.

A vast speculation had fail'd,
And ever he mutter'd and madden'd, and ever wann'd with despair.
Tennyson, Maud, I. 8.

wan²† (wan). An old preterit of *win*¹.

wan-. [< ME. wan-, < AS. wan = MD. D. wan- = OHG. MHG. wan-, G. wahn- = Icel. van- = Sw. Dan. van-, a negative prefix, being the adj. AS. wan = OFries. wan, won = MLG. wan = OHG. wan = Icel. vannr: see *wane*¹, *wane*², *want*¹, wanse. AS. compounds with wan- were numerous: wanhæth, want of health, wanhál, unhealthy, wanhgyd, heedlessness, etc.: see wanbelief, wanhope, wanspeed, wanton, wantrust, wanwit, etc.] A prefix of Anglo-Saxon origin, frequent in Middle English, meaning 'wanting, deficient, lacking,' and used as a negative, like un-, with which it often interchanged. It differs from un- in denoting more emphatically the fact of privation. It still exists as a recognized prefix in provincial use, and in literary use, unrecognized as a prefix, in wanton.

wanbeliever, n. One who disbelieves. Prompt. Parv., p. 515.

wand (wond), n. [< ME. wand, wond, < Icel. vindr (wand-), a wand, a switch, = OSw. wand = Dan. vand = Goth. wandus, a rod; so called from its pliancy, < AS. windan (pret. wand), etc., wind: see *wind*¹.] 1. A slender stick; a rod.

A toppe of it to sette other a wonde
Ya holdon best right in Apriles ende,
When grene, and juce upon hem dothe ascende.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 123.

His spear, to equal which the tallest pine,
Hewn on Norwegian hills to be the mast
Of some great ammiral, were but a wand.
Milton, P. L., I. 294.

2†. A twig; a bough.

O sweetly sang the nightingale,
As she sat on the wand.

The Clerk's two Sons of Owenford (Child's Ballads, II. 66).

3. A rod, or staff having some special use or character. Specifically—(a) A staff of authority.

Though he had both spurs and wand, they seemed rather marks of sovereignty than instruments of punishment.
Sir P. Sidney.

(b) A rod used by conjurers or diviners.

Nay, Lady, sit; if I but wave this wand,
Your nerves are all chained up in alabaster.
Milton, Comus, I. 669.

(c) A small baton which forms part of the insignia of the messenger of a court of justice in Scotland, and which he must exhibit before executing a caption: called more fully wand of peace. (d) The baton used by a musical conductor.—Electric wand, an electrophorus in the form of a baton. See electrophorus.—Runic wand. See *runic*¹.

And here to every thirsty wanderer,
By sly enticement gives his baneful cup.
Milton, Comus, l. 524.

2. pl. In Arachnida, specifically, the wandering as distinguished from the sedentary spiders; the vagabonds. See Vagabond.

wandering (won'dér-ing), p. a. Moving; roaming; pursuing no fixed course, plan, or object; unsettled: as, a wandering spirit; wandering habits; a wandering minstrel.

Pray ye, do not trouble him;
You see he's weak, and has a wandering fancy.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, lv. 5.

If a man's wits be wandering, let him study the mathematics, for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again. Bacon, Studies.

Wandering abscess, a chronic abscess which burrows through the tissues, usually in obedience to the law of gravity, and appears on the surface at some distance from its point of origin.—Wandering cells, the leucocytes; cells resembling, and probably identical with, the white blood-corpuscles, found in the tissues outside of the blood-vessels.—Wandering Jew. (a) A legendary character who, according to one version (that of Matthew Paris, dating from the thirteenth century), was a servant of Pilate, by name Cartaphilus, and gave Christ a blow when he was led out of the palace to execution. According to a later version he was a cobbler named Ahasuerus, who refused Christ permission to sit down and rest when he passed his house on the way to Golgotha. Both legends agree in the sentence pronounced by Christ on the offender, "Thou shalt wander on the earth till I return." A prey to remorse, he has since wandered from land to land without being able to find a grave. The story has been turned to account by many poets and novelists. (b) A plant-name: (1) The beefsteak- or strawberry-geranium, Saxifraga narnentosa; locally, the Kenilworth ivy, Linaría Cymbalaria. (Great Britain.) (2) One of two or three house-plants, as Zelkova pendula (Tradescantia sebrina), which are planted in baskets or vessels of water, whence they spread in a straggling fashion. 3. pendula has lance-ovate or oblong leaves which are crimson beneath and green or purplish above, with two broad silvery stripes. Another sort has bright green leaves.—Wandering shearwater, the greater shearwater, Puffinus major, a bird of the family Procellariidae. See cut under hagden.—Wandering spiders. See wanderer, 2.—Wandering tattler, Heteroscoptes incanum, a bird of the snipe family (Scelopacidae), widely distributed on the coasts and islands of the Pacific. See cut under tattler.—Wandering tumor, one of the solid abdominal viscera which has become movable through relaxation of its attachments, as a floating kidney.

wandering (won'dér-ing), n. [< ME. wanderinge, wandring (= MHG. wanderinge, G. wanderung), verbal n. of wander, v.] 1. The act of one who wanders; a ramble or peregrination; a journeying hither and thither.

wapenshaw (wop'n-shâ), n. [Sc., also wap- enshaw, wapinschar, etc., lit. 'weapon-show,' < wapen (a form of weapon) + shaw.] A show or review of persons under arms, formerly made at certain times in every district. These exhibitions or meetings were not designed for military exerceses, but only to show that the lieges were properly provided with arms. The name has been revived in some quarters in Great Britain, and applied to the periodical gatherings of the volunteer corps of a more or less wide district for review, inspection, shooting competitions, etc. [Scotch.]

We went to the field of war,
And to the weapon-shaw.
Up and War Them A', Willie (Child's Ballads, VII. 265).

wapenshaw (wop'n-shâ), v. i. To hold or attend a wapenshaw. [Scotch.]

wapenshawing (wop'n-shâ-ing), n. [= D. wap- enshawing; as wapenshaw + -ing.] Same wapentake (wop'n-tāk), n. [< ME. wapen- take, wepentake, < AS. wæpengetæc, wæpentac, a district, a wapentake (AL. wapentac or wap- entagium), adapted from Icel. vapnatak, < vap- na, gen. pl. of vapn, a weapon (= AS. wæpen = E. weapon), + -tak, a taking hold, a grasping, esp. a grasp in wrestling (used of the contact of weapons), < taka, take, grasp, seize, touch: see weapon and take, and cf. wapenshaw.]

Formerly, in certain counties of northern, eastern, and midland England, a division or subdivision of a shire, generally corresponding to a hundred in other counties. The term seems to have been originally applied to the armed assemblies of freemen; and there is possibly an allusion to a practice of taking up or 'touching' the arms. Wapentake is still a territorial division in Yorkshire.

It is written that King Allured, or Alfred, who then reigned, did divide the realm into shires, and the shires into hundredes, and the hundredes into wapentakes, and the wapentakes into tithingues, See that tenn tithingues made an hundredhe, and five made a lathre or wapentake.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

The wapentake is found only in the Anglian districts.
. . . To the north of these districts the shires are divided into wards, and to the south into hundredes. Hence the wapentake may be a relic of Scandinavian occupation.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 46.

wapiti (wop'i-ti), n. [Also wappiti, wapite, wap- pitik; < Amer. Ind. (Cree) wapitik, 'white deer,' said to designate the Rocky Mountain goat, Haploceros montanus; used as E., and also in the NL. form Cervus wapiti, by B. S. Barton, in 1809, for the animal defined.] The North American stag or elk, Cervus canadensis, which is the North American representative of the stag or red deer of Europe, and resembles the latter, though it is much larger and of a stronger make, being one of the largest living representatives of the family Cervidae. Wapiti is chiefly a book-name of this deer, which has generally been known since about 1800 as the elk—a name applied in Europe to a very different animal, corresponding to that called moose in North America. (See elk (with cut), moose, stag.) The full-grown male wapiti may exceed a height of 16 hands at the withers, and acquire a weight of more than 1,000 pounds, though not averaging over 600; the form is short for its stature. The coat is some shade of yellowish-gray or brownish-gray, darkening to chestnut-brown on the head, neck, and limbs, even blackening on the belly; on the rump is a white patch bordered with black and extending into the groin; the tail is extremely short. The antlers are very long, with comparatively slender, cylindric, and regularly curved beam, giving off in front the brow- and bez-antlers close together, the royal at end of first third of the beam, a large sur-royal at end of second third, and then fork dichotomously (only exceptionally acquiring any palmation like the crown of the European stag). A pair of good-sized antlers may weigh, with the skull, 60 or 80 pounds, measure 4 or 6 feet along the curve of the beam, and spread 3 or 4 feet apart. The venison is well flavored and highly nutritious. The wapiti has inhabited North America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Mexico to about 67° in the interior; but it has been hunted out of nearly all its range, and is now found chiefly in the Rocky Mountain region of the United States, especially of the Upper Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. It is gregarious, goes in herds or droves sometimes of many hundreds, is slaughtered with little difficulty, and would soon become extinct were no measures taken for its preservation.

wappato (wop'a-tō), n. [Also wapato; < Oregon Ind. wapato, wappatoo (?).] The tubers of Sagittaria variabilis. The Indians of Oregon use them as food.

wappet, v. An obsolete spelling of *wap*¹.

wappent, n. Same as weapon.

wappened, a. A spurious (or perhaps obscene) word occurring only in the following passage. It has been conjectured to be a misprint for weeping.

war¹ (wâr), n. [Early mod. E. warre; < ME. wer, werr, werre, weorre, wyrre, < late AS.

werre (also cited in AL. as war*, in comp. war-scot), < OF. werre, guerre, F. guerre = Pr. guerra, gerra = Sp. Pg. It. guerra, war, < ML. wer-ra, war, < OHG. wer-ra, vexation, strife, controversy, confusion, broil (= MD. werre = MLG. werre, strife, war, hostility), < werran (fir-werran), MHG. werren (ver-werren), G. wirren (ver-wirren), confuse, entangle, embroil, = MD. werren (ver-werren), embroil, entangle; akin to E. worse: see worse, and cf. *war*², ult. a var. of worsé. The F. guerre appears in the phrase nom de guerre, and the Sp. in the dim. guerrilla. Hence *war*¹, v., warray, warrior, etc.] 1. A contest between nations or states (international war), or between parties in the same state (civil war), carried on by force of arms. International or public war is always understood to be authorized by the sovereign powers of the nations engaged in it; when it is carried into the territories of the antagonist it is called an aggressive or offensive war, and when carried on to resist such aggression it is called defensive. Certain usages or rights of war have come to be generally recognized and defined under the name of the Laws of War, which in general (but subject to some humane restrictions which in recent times have been greatly increased) permit the destruction or capture of armed enemies, the destruction of property likely to be serviceable to them, the stoppage of all their channels of traffic, and the appropriation of everything in an enemy's country necessary for the support and subsistence of the invading army. On the other hand, though an enemy may be starved into surrender, wounding, except in battle, mutilation, and all cruel and wanton devastation are contrary to the usages of war, as are also bombarding an unprotected town, the use of poison in any way, and torture to extort information from an enemy: but it is admitted that an enemy may be put to death for certain acts which are in themselves not criminal, and it may be even highly patriotic and praiseworthy, but are injurious to the invaders; such as firing on the invaders although not regularly enrolled in an organized military force, or seeking to impair the invaders' lines of communication.

"After this werr," quod she, "God send us pece."

Geverydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 900.

Learning and art, and especially religion, weave ties that make war look like fratricide, as it is.

Emerson, War.

2. A state of active opposition, hostility, or contest: as, to be at war (that is, engaged in active hostilities).

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war.

Shak., Sonnets, xlv.

A wounded thing with a rancorous cry,

At war with myself and a wretched race.

Tennyson, Maud, x. 2.

3. Any kind of contest or conflict; contention; strife: as, a wordy war.—4. The profession of arms; the art of war.

Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Isa. li. 4.

War is our business, but to whom is giv'n

To die, or triumph, that determine heav'n!

Pope, Iliad, xxii. 171.

5. Forces; army. Compare battle. [Poetical.]

Tickell, On Hunting.

Dan Chaucer, the first warbler. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. Specifically, any one of a great number of small oscine passerine birds, or dentostratal inessorial birds, of different families and many different genera, of both the Old World and the New. Especially—(a) A bird of the group composing the family Sylviidae, or Old World warblers, with scarcely any representatives in America. This is one of the most extensive and varied groups of its grade in ornithology, now generally rated as only a subfamily (Sylvinae) of Turdidae. These warblers are all small, active, sprightly birds, and many are remarkable for the clearness, sweetness, and flexibility of their song. Among typical warblers of the subfamily Sylvinae may be noted the species of Sylvia, the leading genus, as the blackcap and whitethroat; of Melospiza, as the Dartford warbler; of Regulus, as the goldcrest; of Phylloscopus, as the willow-warbler; of Aedon, as the rufous warbler; of Hippobates, as the icterine warbler; of Acrocephalus, as the reed- or sedge-warbler; of Locustella, as the grasshopper-warbler; of Cettia, as Cetti's warbler. Besides these, the accentor or hedge-sparrow, the nightingale (Dautias lucinica), the redstart (Erythraea rubecula), the bluethroat, redstart, whinchat, stonechat, etc., have been brought under the definition of warbler, as members of the sylvine group. (b) In the United States, a bird of a different family, the American warblers, Dendroica or Mniotiltidae, a smaller and more compact group than the Sylvidae, though the species are still very numerous and diversified. Few of them are noted for musical ability. The leading representatives of the American warblers are the numerous wood-warblers of the genus Dendroica; the worm-eating warblers, Helminthophaga and Helminthophaga; the creeping warblers, Mniotilta and Parula; the ground-warblers, as Geothlypis; the chat, Icteria; the water-thrushes, Seiurus; the fly-catching warblers, Mniotiltidae, Setophaga, and many others of tropical America.

3. In bagpipe music, an appoggiatura, or similar melodic embellishment.

In the music performed upon this instrument [the bagpipe] the players introduce among the simple notes of the tune a kind of appoggiatura, consisting of a great number of rapid notes of peculiar embellishment, which they term warblers. Encyc. Brit., III. 235.

Adelaide's warbler, Dendroica adalidis (Baird, 1845), the representative in Porto Rico of Grace's and of the yellow-throated warbler.—African warbler (Latham, 1783), the type species of the genus Sphenocercus, S. africanus. Also called spotted yellow flycatcher by Latham, formerly Muscicapa afra, Motacilla or Sylvia africana, etc., and also placed in the genus Drymarcha by some authors.—Alpine warbler (Latham, 1783), a kind of hedge-warbler, Acrocephalus alpinus, of central and southern Europe, occasionally found in Great Britain. This bird was also called collared star by Latham the same year, having been described by Scopoli in 1769 as Sturnus collaris.—Aquatic warbler (Latham, 1783), one of the reed-warblers, probably Acrocephalus aquaticus; formerly called Sylvia or Salicetia or Calamodytes aquaticus.—Audubon's warbler, Dendroica auduboni, the western representative of the yellow-rump or myrtle-bird, and equally abundant. It differs chiefly in having the throat yellow instead of white. Also called western yellow-rump.—Autumnal warbler, the young of the bay-breasted warbler, mistaken for a distinct species. A. Wilson, 1811.—Azure warbler, the cerulean warbler.—Babbling warbler (Latham, 1783), the lesser whitethroat, Sylvia curruca. See whitethroat, l.—Bachman's warbler (named after the American naturalist John Bachman (1790-1874)), Helminthophaga bachmani of the southern United States and some of the West Indies. (Audubon, 1834.) It is one of the swamp-warblers, and still very rare, though it has been quite recently found to be common in some localities.

—Barred warbler, Sylvia nisoria of Europe, Asia, and Africa.—Bay-breasted warbler, Dendroica castanea of eastern parts of North America. The adult male has the whole breast chestnut.—Belted warbler, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Black-and-white warbler, the creeping warbler, Mniotilta varia, more fully called black-and-white creeping warbler or creeper, also white-poll warbler. See cut under Mniotilta.—Black-and-yellow warbler, Dendroica maculosa. See cut under spotted.—Blackburnian warbler, Dendroica blackburni, the promethean warbler, in adult plumage extensively black variegated with white, the breast and some parts about the head of a flaming orange. It is the most richly colored of the warblers, and is common in many parts of North America. It was named by Latham in 1783 after a Mrs. Blackburn of London.—Black-capped warbler, the blackcap, Sylvia (otfener Curruca) atricapilla, of nearly all Europe, and parts of Asia and Africa.—Black-headed warbler, the American redstart, Setophaga ruticilla. See cut under redstart. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Black-poll warbler, Dendroica striata, when adult having the whole crown black, the upper parts olivaceous streaked with black, and the under parts white streaked with black along the sides. In young plumage it is hardly to be distinguished from the bay-breasted warbler. It is very wide-ranging, from Greenland and Alaska through most of America (probably to Chili). It was originally described in 1772 by J. E. Forster from Hudson's Bay as the striped fly- catcher.—Black-throated blue warbler, Dendroica cerulea, of eastern North America, remarkable for the unusual difference of the sexes in plumage. The male is blue, white below, with black throat and a peculiar white space on the wing; the female is chiefly greenish above and yellowish below, with traces of the characteristic wing-mark.—Black-throated gray warbler, Dendroica nigrescens, of western parts of the United States and Mexico. The adult male is bluish-ash above with a few black streaks, below white streaked on the sides with black, the head black with white stripes and a small bright-yellow spot before the eye.—Black-throated green warbler, Dendroica virens, one of the most abundant wood-warblers of eastern North America. The adult male is olivaceous-green above, below extensively black, with much golden yellow on the sides of the head, and white on the wings and tail. The length is 5 inches. It is one of a group of warblers having several representatives in western North America. See cut under Dendroica.—Black-throated warbler, the black-throated blue warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Blanford's warbler, Sylvia blanfordi, of which only one specimen is known, from Abyssinia. See booby.—Bloody-side or bloody-sided warbler. (a) The chestnut-sided warbler. Pennant, 1785. (b) One of the golden warblers, Dendroica ruficapilla, of the West Indies. Latham, 1783.—Blue-eyed yellow warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendroica aestiva.—Blue golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysotera, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern United States and Canada. See cut under Helminthophaga.—Blue-green warbler, the cerulean warbler in immature plumage, or the female of that species.—Blue mountain warbler, an American warbler so named by A. Wilson in 1812, and never since identified. It was found in the Blue Mountains of Pennsylvania.—Blue-throated warbler (Latham, 1783), the bluethroat, originally described by Edwards in 1743 as the bluethroat redstart, later variously called Motacilla suecica, Sylvia suecica, Sylvia cyanecula, Cyanecula suecica, etc., all of which names are shared by a related species or variety. See cut under bluethroat.—Blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga yemas, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern parts of the United States, originally described by Edwards (before Linnæus) as the pine-creeper.—Blue yellow-backed warbler, Parula (or Compsothlypis) americana. See Parula.—Bonaparte's fly-catching warbler, the young of the Canadian fly-catching warbler, mistaken by Audubon for a different species in 1831, and dedicated to Prince Charles Lucien Bonaparte (1803-67).—Booted warbler, a tree-warbler, Hippobates caligata.—Bourbon warbler (Latham, 1783), the yellow-rumped creeper (Latham, 1781); a white-eye or silver-eye, Zosterops borbonica, peculiar to the Island of Réunion.—Bowman's warbler, Sylvia mystacea of Persia, Palestine, and Abyssinia.—Bush-warblers, the members of the genus Cettia, having only ten rectrices. There are about 12 species, with one exception confined to Asia. The exception is Cetti's warbler, C. cetti, which extends throughout the Mediterranean region, and was originally described in 1776, by the naturalist whose name it bears, as tsingwulo di fiume, which became the buscarie of Buffon and Daubenton. See cut under Cettia.—Caffrarian warbler (Latham, 1783), the so-called red-tailed thrush of Latham (1788), formerly Motacilla or Sylvia caffra, now known as Cosmopsitta caffra (and Bonaparte's phainoceros).—Canadian fly-catching warbler, Myiodytes canadensis, abundant in eastern parts of North America. Also called Canada and spotted flycatcher. The upper parts are bluish-ash variegated with black, and the under parts are yellow with black streaks on the breast.—Canadian warbler. (a) The black-throated blue warbler. (b) The Canadian fly-catching warbler.—Cape May warbler, Dendroica tigrina, formerly Sylvia maritima; so named by A. Wilson, in 1812, from a locality in New Jersey where he found it. In full plumage it is one of the handsomest of the wood-warblers, and has peculiarities which have caused a genus (Perisoreus) to be based upon it.—Caribbean warbler, an American warbler so named by Audubon in 1831, and never since identified. More fully called carolinensis or carolinensis, also duffy warbler.—Cerulean warbler. See cerulean.—Cetti's warbler, one of the bush-warblers.—Chestnut-bellied warbler (Latham, 1783), an Asiatic redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia erythrogastra).—Chestnut-sided warbler, Dendroica pensylvanica of the eastern United States and Canada, having, when adult, the under parts pure-white with a chain of chestnut streaks along each side, and the crown rich-yellow.—Chiff-chaff warbler, Phylloscopus rufus. See cut under chiff-chaff.—Children's warbler, the female or young summer yellow-bird, Dendroica aestiva. Audubon, 1831.—Cingalese warbler (Latham, 1783), the green warbler of Brown (1770) and yellow-bellied creeper of Latham (1787), one of the Acetarinidae, Anthothreptes phaeicollis, extending from Bhutan to Malacca and the Sunda Islands, but not known in Ceylon.—Cisticoline warbler, a grass-warbler; one of a very large and loose group of Old World warbler-like birds, of which the leading genera, in numbers of species, are Cisticola or Drymarcha, with twelve rectrices, and Prinia with ten (as in the genus Cettia). The group is badly defined, and is now generally thrown into the so-called ornithological waste-basket (Tinnitidae). Most of the species of the three genera named have been placed in each of the others, and Drymarcha has practically included the members of both. Among notable members of the group are the tailor-warblers or tailor birds (see Ootholymus, Sutoria, and tailor-bird, with cuts), with twelve rectrices, and the species of Suga (which see), with ten rectrices. The group is best developed in Africa and Asia. Cisticola curstana (with thirty technical synonyms) extends from southern Europe, throughout Africa and through the warmer parts of Asia, to the Indo-Malayan Islands; C. subruficapilla (with more than thirty synonyms) inhabits most of Africa.—Citrine warbler (Latham, 1783), the remarkable New Zealand Acanthisitta chloris. See Xenicidae.—Citron warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendroica aestiva. Swainson and Richardson, 1831.—Connecticut warbler, Parus agilis, a ground-warbler so named by Wilson in 1812, common in eastern parts of the United States, especially in the fall.—Creeping warblers, the American warblers of the genera Mniotilta and Parula. See cut under Mniotilta.—Dartford warbler (Latham, 1783), the Motacilla undata of Boddart, 1758 (based on the pittehou of Daubenton, Planches Enluminées, 665, fig. 1, 1788), also called Sylvia provincialis, S. undata, S. dactyloides, S. ferruginea, etc., and type of the genus Melospiza (which see, with cut), a warbler found from England and France to northern Africa and Palestine. — Daurian warbler (Latham, 1788), the Daurian redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) aurora, inhabiting most of Asia and some of the adjacent islands. — Desert-warbler, Sylvia nana, characteristic of arid wastes from Algeria to Persia and other parts of Asia. — Dusky warbler, (a) A bird so named by Latham in 1788, but never identified. It is supposed to be a species of Prinia or of Drymops. (b) The yellow-rumped warbler. Pennant, 1785. Also umbrose warbler. (c) The carbonated warbler. Nuttall, 1882. — Dwarf warbler (Latham, 1788), Acanthiza pusilla, a warbler-like bird of Australia. — Equinoctial warbler (Latham, 1788), Tatara equinoctialis, of Christmas Island in the Pacific Ocean. This is closely related to the bird figured under Tatara. — Fat warbler. Same as grasseet warbler. — Flaxen warbler, a bird so named by Latham in 1788, apparently Prinia mystacea. — Fly-catching warblers, the American warblers of the subfamily Setophaginae, as the redstart, the species of Myiodynastes, Cardellina, Basileuterus, etc., chiefly of tropical and subtropical regions. See cuts under Myiodynastes and redstart. — Garden warbler, the common European and African Sylvia hortensis, the greater pettichaps. See cut under pettichaps. — Golden-cheeked warbler, Dendroica chrysoparia, a relative of the black-throated green warbler, found from Texas to Guatemala. Solator and Salvin, 1860. — Golden-crowned warbler, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. Also golden-crowned flycatcher (the original name, bestowed by Edwards). — Golden swamp-warbler, the prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary. — Golden warblers. See golden. — Gold-wing, gold-winged, or golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera. See cut under Helminthophaga. — Grace's warbler, Dendroica gracia (named by S. F. Baird in 1865 after Grace D. Coues), a wood-warbler resembling D. dominica, discovered in Arizona by Coues in 1864. — Grass-warbler, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. — Grass-warbler. (a) A clatoline warbler, especially one of the genus Drymops in a broad sense. (b) Any member of the genus Lucinola, a small group of about 12 species, chiefly Asiatic, and especially Himalayan, with one species extending into the Mediterranean region, and another in South Africa. There are twelve tail-feathers, the tarsus is scutellate, the wings are short with spurious first primary, and the prevailing colors are russet and olive-brown. The type is L. aedon (of Pallas). This genus has six other New Latin names. — Great-tailed warbler (Latham, 1788), one of the South African grass-warblers, formerly Sylvia macroura, now known as Prinia (or Drymops) maculosa. — Green black-capped warbler, Wilson's fly-catching warbler. Nuttall. — Green warbler. (a) The Cingalese warbler. Brown, 1776. (b) The black-throated green warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. — Ground-warblers, the American warblers of the genera Geothlypis and related forms, as the Maryland yellowthroat. See cut under Geothlypis. — Guirra warbler (Latham), a South American tanager, Nemoria guirra. — Hedge-warbler, the hedge-sparrow (of Albin, 1788), Acrocorax modularis. See cut under Acrocorax. Latham, 1788. — Hemlock-warbler, the young Blackburnian warbler, Sylvia parus of Wilson, Nuttall, and Audubon. — Hooded warbler, the hooded fly-catching warbler, Myiodynastes mistratus, of the eastern parts of the United States. The adult male is of an olivaceous color above, rich-yellow below, the head mostly black with a mask of rich yellow. Also called mottled warbler, Selby's sylvan flycatcher, and hooded titmouse. — Icterus warbler, a tree-warbler, Hypocitrus icterina. — Jamaica warbler, Dendroica dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Latham, 1788. — Kentucky warbler, Oporornis formosa, a ground-warbler so named by Wilson in 1811. It is entirely rich-yellow underneath, olivaceous above, with a black bar on each side of the head, and a yellow mark about the eye. It is common in eastern parts of the United States. More fully called by Audubon Kentucky fly-catching warbler. — Kirkland's warbler, Dendroica kirklandi, a rare wood-warbler named in 1852 by S. F. Baird after Dr. Jared P. Kirkland of Ohio, where the bird was discovered, at Cleveland, May, 1861. — Lawrence's warbler (named after George N. Lawrence of New York), Helminthophaga lawrencei. Herrick, 1874. — Long-legged warbler (Latham, 1788), the remarkable New Zealand Xenicus longipes. See Xenicus. — Long-tailed warbler (Latham, 1788), the tailor-warbler or tailor-bird. See Sutoria. — Louisiana warbler, the blue yellow-backed warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. — Lucy's warbler (named after the daughter of S. F. Baird), Helminthophaga luciae, of Arizona. J. G. Cooper, 1862. It is clear-ashy, white below, with chestnut crown-patch and upper tail-coverts. — Macgillivray's warbler, Geothlypis macgillivrayi, the western representative of the mourning warbler, more fully called Macgillivray's ground-warbler: originally described by Audubon in 1839, and dedicated to William Macgillivray, a Scotch ornithologist, who wrote most of the technical parts of Audubon's "Ornithological Biography" and "Birds of America." — Magellanic warbler (Latham, 1788), a South American rock-wren, Scytalopus magellanicus, of the family Pteroptochidae. See cut under Scytalopus. — Magnolia warbler, the black-and-yellow warbler, described as Sylvia magnolia by A. Wilson in 1811. — Marmora's warbler, Sylvia sarda or Melospiza sarda, of the Mediterranean region. — Marsh-warbler, one of the reed-warblers, Acrocephalus palustris, of parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. — Maryland warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat. See cut under Geothlypis. — Maurice warbler (Latham, 1788), the white-eye or silver-eye of Mauritius, Zosterops mauritiana. — Mitered warbler, the hooded warbler. Also called mottled sylvan flycatcher. — Moor warbler, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) maura, a whinchat widely distributed in Asia. — Mourning warbler, Geothlypis philadelphia, so named by A. Wilson in 1810 from the black veiled with gray on the breast, as if the bird were wearing crape. It is a common ground-warbler of many parts of North America. — Nashville warbler, Helminthophaga ruticilla, a common swamp-warbler or worm-eating warbler of most parts of North America, discovered by A. Wilson in 1811, and named after a city in Tennessee. — New York warbler, the New York water-thrush, Seiurus noveboracensis. See cut under Seiurus. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. — Olive warbler. (a) A monotypic American warbler named Sylvia olivacea by J. P. Giraud in 1841; Pseudodramus olivaceus of Coues, inhabiting Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and southward, chiefly of an olivaceous color with orange-brown or deep saffron-yellow head and neck, and a black transocular bar. It is 4½ inches long. Also olive-backed and orange-breasted warbler. (b) The female of the black-throated blue warbler. P. H. Gosse. [Jamaica.] (c) The summer yellow-bird, Dendroica aestiva, in some obscure plumage. Pennant, 1785; Stephens, 1817. — Orange-breasted warbler. Same as olive warbler (a). — Orange-crowned warbler, Helminthophaga celata, named by Thomas Say (1828). It inhabits all of North America, and several varieties are described. The crown has a concealed patch of orange. — Orange-thighed warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, which in some autumnal and other plumages has the flanks tinged with orange-brown. The adult male is figured under Geothlypis. Pennant, 1785. — Orange-throated warbler. (a) The prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary. Latham, 1788. (b) The Blackburnian warbler. — Orphean warbler, Sylvia orpheus, which, including its variety S. jerdoni, inhabits most of Europe and much of Asia and Africa. — Palestine warbler, Sylvia melanothorax, of Palestine and Cyprus. — Party-colored warbler. (a) The blue yellow-backed warbler. (b) The prairie-warbler. Stephens, 1817. — Pendle warbler, Dendroica dominica, formerly Sylvia pendula. Latham, 1788. — Pine-creeping warbler, Dendroica pinus or vigorsii, one of the commonest wood-warblers of the United States, of an olivaceous color above and yellowish below. — Pine-swamp warbler, the black-throated blue warbler. — Pine-warbler, one of two different American warblers: (a) The pine-creeping of Edwards, and not of Catesby; the blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga pinus. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. (b) The pine-creeping of Catesby, 1771; the pine-creeping warbler, Dendroica pinus or vigorsii. See cut under pine-warbler. — Prothonotary warbler. See prothonotary. — Provincial warbler, the Dartford warbler. — Quebec warbler, the chestnut-sided warbler. Pennant, 1785. — Rathbone's warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendroica aestiva, in some immature plumage. Audubon. — Red-backed warbler, the prairie-warbler. P. H. Gosse. [Jamaica.] — Red-faced or red-fronted warbler, Cardellina rubrifrons, a fly-catching warbler of the southern border of the United States and southward. See Cardellina. — Redstart warbler, the European redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) phoenicea. See cut under redstart. — Red-throated warbler, the chestnut-sided warbler. Latham, 1788. — Rocky Mountain warbler, Virginia's warbler. — Roscoe's warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, in some variant plumage. Audubon, 1882. — Ruddy warbler, the rock-warbler. Latham, 1801. — Rufous-vented warbler (Latham, 1801), an Australian thick-headed shrike, Pachycephala rufiventris, earlier called by Latham rufous-vented honey-eater, and later by Lewin orange-breasted thrush. — Rufous warbler, Sylvia (or Aedon) galatodes, of southern Europe and northern Africa. — Ruppell's warbler, Sylvia ruppelli, of southern Europe, Asia Minor, Palestine, and some parts of Africa. — Rush-warbler (Latham, 1788), an unidentified sparrow of the United States, supposed to be the field-sparrow, Spizella pusilla. — Rusty-sided warbler (Latham, 1801), the cerulean creeper of the same author and date, Zosterops cerulea, a white-eye of Australia, New Zealand, and the Chatham Islands. — St. Domingo warbler, Dendroica dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Turton, 1806. — Sardinian warbler, Sylvia melanocephala, of the Mediterranean region. — Sennett's warbler (named after George B. Sennett of New York), one of the creeping warblers, Parula nigricolor, of Texas and southward. Coues, 1877. — Siberian warbler (Latham, 1788), the Asiatic Acrocorax montanellus, occasional in Europe, related to the common hedge-accentor. — Spectacled warbler, Sylvia conspicillata, of the Mediterranean region, extending from Palestine to the Canaries. — Spotted warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. (b) The black-and-yellow warbler, Dendroica maculosa. See spotted (with cut). — Spotted yellow warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. These two accounts are the bases of Motacilla tigrina (Gmelin, 1788). (b) Dendroica maculosa. See cut under spotted. — Streaked warbler (Latham, 1801), an Australian warbler-like bird, formerly Sylvia sagittata, now known as Chthonicola sagittata. — Subalpine warbler, Sylvia subalpina, of southern Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia. — Summer warbler, the summer yellow-bird of North America; one of the golden warblers, Dendroica aestiva, among the most abundant and blat, either one of two different malurine birds of Australia, Malurus cyaneus and M. lewinii, formerly placed in the genus Sylvia. Latham; Shaw. Also called blue-wren. — Swainson's warbler (named after William Swainson, an English gunian naturalist), Helminthophaga swainsoni, described by Audubon in 1834, and long considered one of the rarest of the American warblers, but lately found abundant in South Carolina. — Sybil warbler, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) sybilla, peculiar to Madagascar. — Sylvan warblers, the American fly-catching warblers of the genus Myiodynastes: so called as pertaining to Nuttall's genus Sylvianota (1840). See cut under Myiodynastes. — Tennessee warbler, Helminthophaga peregrina, a common swamp-warbler of chiefly eastern parts of North America: named after the State where found by A. Wilson in 1811. — Tolmie's warbler, Macgillivray's warbler. J. K. Townsend, 1839. — Townsend's warbler, Dendroica townsendi, the western representative of the black-throated green warbler, discovered by Townsend and Nuttall on the Columbia river in 1835, and named after the former by Audubon. It ranges from Alaska to Guatemala, and has been taken near Philadelphia. — Tristram's warbler (named after Canon H. B. Tristram of England), Sylvia deserticola, of the Algerian Sahara. — Umbrose warbler. Same as dusky warbler (b). Latham, 1788. — Undated warbler, a bird so named by Latham in 1788, apparently a species of Cisticola. — Vigors's warbler (named after N. A. Vigors, an English gunian naturalist), the pine-creeping warbler as mistaken for another species. Audubon, 1832. Also called Vigors's vireo (Nuttall, 1832). — Virginia's warbler, Helminthophaga virginica: so named by Baird in 1860 after the wife of Dr. W. W. Anderson; the Rocky Mountain warbler. — Western warbler, the hermit-warbler, discovered by J. K. Townsend at Fort Vancouver, May 28th, 1835, and by Thomas Nuttall at about the same time. — White-eyed warbler (Latham, 1788), the white-eye of Madagascar, Zosterops madagascariensis. — White-poll warbler, the black-and-white warbler. Latham, 1788; Pennant, 1785. — White-throated blue warbler, the cerulean warbler. — White-throated warbler, Helminthophaga leucobronchialis. W. Brewster, 1874. — Wilson's fly-catching warbler (named after Alexander Wilson (1766-1818), the American ornithologist), Myiodynastes pusillus, inhabiting all parts of North America: more fully called Wilson's green black-capped fly-catching warbler, and formerly Sylvia wilsoni (Bonaparte, 1824). It is olivaceous and yellow, having in the adult male a square patch of glossy black on the crown. See cut under Myiodynastes. — Worm-eating warbler. ain, as Lanarkshire and Renfrewshire in Scotland, and Northumberland and Cumberland in the north of England. (e) The division of a forest. (f) One of the apartments into which a hospital is divided: as, a fever ward;

a convalescent ward.

11. A curved ridge of metal inside a lock, forming an obstacle to the passage of a key which has not a corresponding notch; also, the notch or slot in the web or bit of a key into which such a ridge fits when the key is applied.
The wards of a lock are often named according to their shapes: as, L-ward; T-ward. The wards are usually made of sheet-metal bent into a round form, and hence are sometimes termed wheels. See cut under pick, 1.

ward³, adv. [< ME. ward, a quasi-adverb, being the suffix -ward separated from its base, as in to me ward. See -ward and toward.] The suffix -ward separated as a distinct word.

-ward (wârd). [*< ME. -ward, < AS. -weard =
OS. -ward = OFries. -ward = D. -waart = MLG.*

LG. -ward = OHG. MHG. -wert (G. -wärts) = Icel. -verthr = Goth. -wairths; akin to L. versus ("vert-tus"), which is postposed in the same way, < vertere, turn, become, = AS. weorthan, become: see worth¹ and verse¹. Cf. -wards.]
A suffix of Anglo-Saxon origin, indicating direction or tendency to or from a point. It is affixed to many adverbs and prepositions, as for (for-), forth, from (fro-), to, after, back, hind, in, out, hither, thither, whither, up, nether, thence, etc.; to words indicating points of the compass (east, west, etc.); to nouns indicating a goal, center, end, direction, etc., as home, way, wind, down, heaven, God, etc. With some of these it was used pleonastically, as abackward, adownward. Most of the forms have a collateral form with adverbial genitive
-s, as forwards, afterwards, inwards, outwards, etc. In toward, the elements were formerly often separated, as in the Bible: to us-ward (Ps. xl. 5; 2 Pet. iii. 9); to thee-ward (1 Sam. xix. 4); to you-ward (2 Cor. xiii. 3); to the mercy seatward (Ex. xxxvii. 9); etc.

of pens for cattle, hogs, etc., perhaps a pound. Compare hog-mace.

warden² (wâr'dn), n. [*< ME. wardun, wardone; usually associated with warden¹, and taken to mean a pear that may be kept long (cf. OF.
poire de garde, "a warden, or winter pear, a peare which may be kept verie long," Cotgrave):*

see *warden*¹. But the sense of warden is active, 'one who keeps,' and it does not seem to apply to a pear; and the ME. forms of *warden*¹ are different from those of *warden*². Perhaps the origin is in OF. wardon*, a var. of gardon (Godofroy), a var. of garden, garden: see garden.] A kind of pear, used chiefly for roasting or baking.

Wardone, peers, volemmun. Wardone tree, volemmun. Prompt. Paro., p. 516.

Tennyson, Maud, vii.

2. A collective noun used generally in composition with the name of the material, or a term relating to the characters of the articles or the use to which they are put: as, china-ware, tinware, hardware, tableware.—Adams's ware, in ceram., a fine English pottery made at Tunstall, at the end of the eighteenth century, by William Adams, a pupil of Wedgwood. The pieces are often close imitations of the Wedgwood ware.—Agen ware. (a) An inferior kind of Roman pottery, softer and coarser than Samian ware: so called from Agen in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, France, where much of this ware was found with the furnaces. (b) A decorative pottery made in the seventeenth century, many of the pieces having the forms of animals. Brongniart.—Apulian ware. See Apulian pottery (under Apulian), and cut under stamnos.—Aretine ware. See Aretine.—Awata ware, pottery and porcelain made at Awata, near Kioto, Japan. The greater number of the pieces known to be of this manufacture are of yellowish hard paste, with a crackled glaze as if in imitation of Satsuma ware; but a curious and beautiful imitation of old Delft and a thin porcelain of a peculiar grayish white are known.—Bamboo ware, a variety of Wedgwood ware: so named from its color, and otherwise known as cane-colored ware.—Basalt ware. See basalt.—Benares ware, a name given to a kind of ornamental metal-work made in India, in which a pattern is produced by chasing or in other ways depressing the surface of the metal.—Black ware. Same as basalt ware.—Blue jasper ware, a name given to a blue-glazed pottery of modern manufacture, especially that made at the Ferrybridge factory.—Böttger ware. (a) A fine stoneware varying from red to dark brown, and approaching black, produced by the chemist J. F. Böttger about 1708-9 in the course of his experiments in the search for porcelain. (b) The first real or kaolinic porcelain produced in Europe: it was first made by Böttger about 1710. — Bristol Delft ware, an enameled pottery made at Bristol throughout the eighteenth century, especially a highly decorated ware in which landscapes, figure-subjects, etc., covering the whole dish, bottom and marly alike, and plates or dishes closely imitated from Chinese enameled porcelain, are included. This decorative Delft has not been manufactured since 1788. Jewitt. — Bristol ware. Same as double-glazed ware. — Caffagiolo ware, a variety of the Italian enameled and painted earthenware known as majolica. It was made in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries at a factory belonging to the family of the Medici in the village of Caffagiolo, on the road between Florence and Bologna. The name is also spelled, according to the irregular orthography of the time, Cafagiolo, Caffagiolo, Caffagiolo, Caffagiolo. The marks of this factory are much varied, but generally include the words in Caffagiolo variously spelled. A characteristic mark of these wares is the free use of a dark but extremely brilliant blue often in large masses, also a brilliant but opaque orange, and an opaque Indian red. Metallic luster was early used at Caffagiolo. — Canton lacquer-ware. See lacquer-ware. — Cashan ware. Same as Kashee ware. — Fortnum, S. K. Handbook, Majolica. — Castelli ware, pottery made at Castelli, in eastern Italy; specifically, an enameled and richly decorated pottery made during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and even later. This magnificent ware preserves some of the characteristics of majolica, but is more pictorial in its decoration, being painted with landscapes, mythological scenes, etc. The colors are often heightened with gold. — Cologne ware, a name commonly given to the hard stoneware of which ornamental jugs, tankards, etc., were made, especially in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and formerly called grès de Flandres. The city of Cologne was the chief seat of this manufacture. Compare grès de Flandres (under grès) and stoneware. — Combed ware. See combed. — Coralline ware. See coralline. — Cracked ware. See cracked. — Cream-colored ware, pottery or stoneware having a cream-colored base; specifically, a variety of the fine table-ware made by Wedgwood in the latter part of the eighteenth century. This ware was afterward called queen's-ware, from the supposed preference of Queen Charlotte, wife of George III. The cream-colored ware or queen's-ware were made by other potters was copied closely from that of Wedgwood. — Crystalline ware. See crystalline. — Cullen ware, Cologne ware. — Delft ware. (a) Pottery made in and near the town of Delft in Holland; specifically, pieces for table use, and decorated vases for the mold from within, and worked over with a sponge so as to give it the required thickness and a smooth inner surface. — Incised ware, pottery decorated by scratches upon the surface. Specifically — (a) A coarse earthenware covered with an outer coat of a different color, which, being deeply scratched, shows the body of the ware. (b) A kind of pottery in which the body is scratched or scored, the whole being then covered with a transparent glaze, which shows a deeper color where it fills these incisions than elsewhere. — India ware, a name inaccurately given in England to the more common varieties of Chinese and Japanese porcelains imported into Europe by the East India Company or otherwise. — Kashee ware, a fine ceramic ware made in Persia, and decorated in blue on white in a manner closely resembling Chinese porcelain. It is apparently a mixed or hybrid porcelain, as it is softer than Oriental porcelain, and evidently different from the soft or tender porcelain of Europe. Also called Kashan, Cashan, and Kachy ware. — Kito ware, ceramic ware made in or near the city of Kito in Japan. Immense quantities of pottery and porcelain are made there, and many characteristic varieties are imitated with great success; but the name is given especially to a hard yellow ware with crackled glaze peculiar to Japan. — Lapis-lazuli ware. See lapis. — Lava ware. See lava. — Old Fulham ware, a name given to the English imitations of German grès cérame or hard stoneware made at Fulham from about 1670. — Palissy ware, a peculiar kind of pottery, remarkable for its beautiful glaze, the ornamentation being in very high relief, and consisting frequently of models of fish, reptiles, shells, or leaves. Bernard Palissy, a French potter of the sixteenth century, was the designer of this ware, and the art of manufacturing it died with him, all attempts to imitate it having failed. — Pebble ware. See pebbleware. — Persian ware. See Persian. — Plated ware. See plated. — Plumbeous ware, lead-glazed pottery. — Porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to that variety which is speckled red and black. — Raphael ware, an old name for Italian majolica, taken from the occasional appearance of designs by Raphael, or ascribed to him, painted on majolica plates of a late period, or perhaps, in some cases, from the use of arabesques similar to those painted under Raphael's direction in the Loggia of the Vatican and elsewhere. — Red porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to pieces which are speckled red and white. — Robbia ware. Same as Della Robbia ware. — Roman red ware. Same as Samian ware. — Rustic, Salopian, Samian, sanitary ware. See the adjectives. — Satsuma ware. (a) Pottery made in the prince of Satsuma, in the island of Kiusiu, Japan. It has an extremely hard paste, is pale-yellow or brownish-yellow in color, and is covered with a very minute crackle. (b) A pottery made at Stoke-upon-Trent in England, imitated in the main from the Japanese Satsuma. — Serpentine, Sevillian, sigillated, silicon ware. See the qualifying words. — Sinceny ware, an enameled pottery made in Sinceny, in the department of the Aisne, France, decorated with great taste and delicacy, in partial imitation of Rouen ware and later of Chinese ceramic painting, and also in various fantastic styles. — Small ware or wares, textile articles of the tape kind, as narrow bindings of cotton, linen, silk, or woolen fabric; plaited sash-cord, braid, etc.; also, buttons, hooks, eyes, and other dress-trimmings; hence, trifles.

Every one knows Grubstreet is a market for small ware in wit. Swift, To a Young Poet.

Stamped ware. Same as sigillated ware. — Stanniferous ware, earthenware coated with an enamel of which tin is a principal ingredient. This enamel is used for fine wares, such as Delft. — Tinned, tortoise-shell, Umbrian ware. See the adjectives. — Tunbridge ware, a species of inlaid or mosaic work in wood. It derives its name from the place of manufacture, Tunbridge in England. — Verd antique ware, a variety of pebbleware, generally veined with dark-green, gray, and black. — Wedgwood ware [named after Josiah Wedgwood (1730-95), the inventor, born in Staffordshire, England], a superior kind of semi-vitrified pottery, without much superficial glaze, and capable of taking on the most brilliant and delicate colors produced by fused metallic oxides and others. It is much used for ornamental ware, as vases, etc., and, owing to its hardness and property of resisting the action of all corrosive substances, for mortars in the laboratory. — Welsh ware, a pottery made at Isleworth, near London in England, from about 1825; a strong and solid earthenware of yellowish-brown color with a transparent glaze. = Syn. Merchandise, etc. See property.

Delft Ware, 17th century. (From "L'Art pour Tous.")

domestic interiors. Pottery has been made in this place from ancient times, and dated pieces exist as old as the beginning of the sixteenth century; but the importation from China and Japan of Oriental porcelain stimulated the decorators of later times, so that the richest pieces are of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. (b) A name given in England to vessels of pottery for domestic use, especially for table service. It is common to discriminate pottery from porcelain by the name Delft or Delf, and also Delf-china, etc. — Della Robbia ware. (a) A name given to a class of pottery used for works of art in relief and in the round; generally asserted to have been invented by Luca della Robbia in the fifteenth century. It has a hard and well-baked body of brown terra-cotta, upon which a white stanniferous enamel is applied. This is in some cases left white, or white with a background of blue; in others, all parts of the composition are richly decorated with color, especially green, yellow, and purple or maroon. The largest and most elaborate works in Della Robbia ware were made after Luca's death, the most important of all being, perhaps, the frieze on the hospital at Pistoia. Central Italy abounds in the productions of this school of artists, including tabernacles or shrines decorated with sacred subjects, altar-pieces in bas-relief and alto-relief, architectural ornaments, and fountains or lavabos in series of churches and convents. (b) A fine terra-cotta, enameled in colors, made in England for architectural decorations, flower-vases, garden-seats, etc., especially that made at Tamworth at works founded in 1847. — Double-glazed ware, stoneware to which a glaze is applied in liquid form, both inside and outside, before it is fired. Also called Bristol ware. — Egyptian black ware, Egyptian ware. See Egyptian. — Etruscan ware. See Etruscan. — Faenza ware, a name formerly given to Italian majolica. J. C. Robinson, in Cat. of Soules Coll., 1856. Compare faience. — Glass-glazed ware. See glass-glazed. — Graino ware. See graino. — Green-jasper ware, a variety of Wedgwood ware. The name has been given to that kind of pebbleware which is mottled green and gray. — Hollow ware, vessels deeper than flat ware, and especially such as are made in outside molds, which give the external surface — the clay being forced into

5. A summons; a call; a bidding.

It [sherrie] illumineth the face, which as a beacon gives warning . . . to arm. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 8. 117.

6. A notice given to terminate a business relation, as that of master and servant, employer and employee, landlord and tenant; a notice to quit.

Servants in husbandry [28 Hen. VI., c. 12] are required to give their masters warning, and to engage with some other master before quitting their present service.

Ribben-Turner, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 66.

warning (wâr'ning), p. a. In biol., serving as a menace to enemies; of threatening aspect: somewhat specially used of a strikingly conspicuous coloration. See the quotation.

A never-failing interest attaches to the subject of Warning Colors. The history of the discovery of warning colors in caterpillars is quoted with many examples, showing that the education of enemies is assisted by the fact that warning colors and patterns often resemble each other, and there is abundant evidence to show that insect-eating animals learn by experience. Amer. Nat., Oct., 1890, p. 929.

warningly (wâr'ning-li), adv. In a warning manner; so as to warn; by way of notice or admonition.

warning-piece (wâr'ning-pēs), n. Something that warns. (a) A warning-gun; a signal-gun; the discharge of a cannon intended as a notification. Compare piece, 4 (b).

Hark! upon my life, the knight! 'tis your friend;
This was the warning-piece of his approach.

Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, v. 2.

The treason of Watson and Cleark, two English seminary, is sufficiently known; it was as a "prædudum" or warning-piece to the great "fougade," the discharge of the powder-treasure. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 97.

(b) In horol., a part of the striking-mechanism of a clock that, by the movement of the lower wheel, throws the striking-system periodically into action. It is also operated by the strike-or-silent mechanism, so that the striking-mechanism may be thrown out of gear at will. When in position to work, it causes a slight noise at the instant of starting the striking-parts, and thus gives warning that the clock is about to strike.

warning-wheel (wâr'ning-hwēl), n. In horol., a warning-piece in the form of a wheel.

warnish, warniset, v. t. Middle English forms of garnish.

Since thy best props are warp'd!
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, III. 2.

Confess, or I will warp
Your limbs with such keen tortures — Shelley, The Cenci, v. 3.

The cracked door, ill-fitting and warped from its original shape, guided us by a score of glittering crevices to the room we sought.

D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxiii.

7. To turn aside from the true direction; cause to bend or incline; pervert.

This first avowed, nor folly warp'd my mind.
Dryden, Sig. and Gula, I. 402.

By the present mode of education we are forcibly warp'd from the bias of nature.

His heart was form'd for softness — warp'd to wrong.
Byron, Corsair, III. 23.

Men's perceptions are warp'd by their passions.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 182.

8. Naut., to move into some desired place or position by hauling on a rope or warp which has been fastened to something fixed, as a buoy, anchor, or other ship at or near that place or position: as, to warp a ship into harbor or to her berth.

They warp'd out their ships by force of hand.
Mir. for Mags., p. 881.

Seeing them warp themselves to windward, we thought it not good to be boarded on both sides at an anchor.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 41.

9. In agri., to fertilize, as poor or barren land, by means of artificial inundation from rivers which hold large quantities of earthy matter, or warp (see warp, n., 4), in suspension. The operation, which consists in inclosing a body or sheet of water till the sediment it holds in suspension has been deposited, can be carried out only on flat low-lying tracts which may be readily submerged. This system was first systematically practised in Great Britain on the banks of the Trent, Ouse, and other rivers which empty into the estuary of the Humber.

10. To change. [Rare.]

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.
Shak., As you Like It, II. 7. 187.

II. intrans. 1. To turn, twist, or be twisted out of straightness or the proper shape.

After the manner of wood that curbeth and warpeth with the fire.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 561.

It's better to shoot in a bow that has been shot in before, and will never start, than to draw a fair new one, that for every arrow will be warping.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

Ye are green wood, see ye warp not.
Tennyson, Princess, II.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; deviate; swerve.

There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp.
Shak., M. for M., I. 1. 15.

Who like a fleeing slavish parasite,
In warping proff or a traitorous sleight,
Hoops round his rotten body with devotes.

Marlowe, Hero and Leander, vi.

5. To fly with a twisting or bending to this side and that; deflect the course of flight; turn about in flying, as birds or insects.

As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind.

Milton, P. L., I. 341.

6. To wind yarn off bobbins, to form the warp of a web. See the quotation.

Warping, therefore, consists in arranging the threads according to number and colour, or in any special manner that may be necessary, and to keep them in their relative places after they have been so laid.

A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 68.

7. To slink; cast the young prematurely, as cows. — 8. Naut., to work forward by means of a rope fastened to something fixed, as in moving from one berth to another in a harbor, or in making one's way out of a harbor in a calm, or against a contrary wind.

I got out of the Mole of Chio into the sea by warping forth, with the helps of Genouesee botes.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 101.

warp (wârp), n. [< ME. warpe; < warpe, v.] 1. A throw; a cast. — 2. Hence, a cast of herrings, haddocks, or other fish; four, as a tale of counting fish. [Prov. Eng.]—3. A cast lamb, kid, calf, foal, or the like; the young of an animal when brought forth prematurely. [Prov. Eng.]—4. The sediment which subsides from turbid water; the alluvial deposit of muddy water artificially introduced into low lands in order to enrich or fertilize them. The term warp is sometimes applied to tidal alluvium. "The Humber warp is a marine and estuarine silt and clay, which occurs above the Peat beds." (Woodward.) As the word is used by J. Trimmer, it has nearly the same meaning as surface-soil. The word is rarely, if ever, used in the United States as meaning a sedimentary deposit.

5. A cast or twist; the twist or bending which occurs in wood in drying; the state of having a cast, or of being warped or twisted.

Somebody in Berkshire, I fancy, had warped his mind against you, and no mind is more capable of warps than his. S. Boules, in Merriam, II. 387.

6. The threads which are extended lengthwise in a loom, and across which the woof is thrown in the process of weaving.

The ground of the future stuff was formed by a number of parallel strings called the warp, having their upper ends attached to a horizontal beam, and drawn taut by weights hung from their lower ends. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 206.

Weaving through all the poor details
And homespun warp of circumstance.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

7. Naut., a rope, smaller than a cable, used in towing, or in moving a ship by attachment to something fixed; a towing-line.

We furl'd now for the last time together, and came down and took the warp ashore.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 430.

A warp of weeks, four weeks; a month. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Cerdcus . . . was the first May-lord or captain of the Morris-dance that on those embemched shelves stamp'd his footing, where cods and dog-fish swomme not a warp of weeks forerunning. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe. (Davies.)

To part a warp. Same as to part a line (which see, under line²).—Warp-dyeing machine, an apparatus for drawing warp-threads, laid out in sets, through a dye-beck. Each warp is separated from the next by a pin, and the set is passed through the dye between rollers, and delivered from between squeezing-cylinders, which press out the superfluous dye. E. H. Knight.

warpage (wâr'pāj), n. [warp + -age.] The act of warping; also, a charge per ton made on shipping in some harbors.

war-paint (wâr'pānt), n. 1. Among some savage tribes, paint applied to the face and other parts of the person, according to a recognized and traditional system, as a sign that the wearer is about to engage in war. Its origin may have been an attempt to strike terror to the mind of the enemy.

The war-paint on the Sachem's face,
Unwet with tears, shone fierce and red.
Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook, III.

2. Hence, full dress and adornment; official costume. [Slang.]

war-path (wâr'pāth), n. Among the American Indians, the path or route followed by a warlike expedition; also, the military undertaking itself.—To go on the war-path, to go to war.

"The warrior whose eye is open can see his enemy," said Magua. . . "I have brought gifts to my brother. His nation would not go on the warpath, because they did not think it well."

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xviii.

warp-beam (wâr'pēm), n. In a loom, the roller on which the warp-threads are wound, and from which they are drawn as the weaving proceeds. It is placed at the back, opposite the cloth-beam, which receives the finished fabric. E. H. Knight.

warp-dresser (wâr'pdrēs'ēr), n. In weaving, a machine for treating yarns with size before winding them on the yarn-beam of a loom. It is superseded in some mills by the larger machine called a slasher. E. H. Knight.

warper (wâr'pēr), n. [warp + -er.] 1†. A weaver.—2. One who winds yarn in preparation for weaving, to form the warp of a web.—3. A warping-machine.

warp-frame (wâr'pfrām), n. In lace-manuf., a machine employing a thread for each needle, the threads being wound on a beam like the warp-beam of a loom (whence the name). Also called warp-net frame.

warping-bank (wâr'ping-bangk), n. A bank or mound of earth raised around a field for retaining the water let in for the purpose of enriching the land with the warp or sediment.

Cf. guaranty, guarantee.] 1. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept; warrant.

From your love I have a warranty

To unburden all my plots and purposes.

Shak., M. of V., I. 1. 132.

Nor farther notice, Arete, we crave

Than thine approval's sovereign warranty.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

There is no scientific warranty for saying that Matter is absolutely indestructible, and more than one consideration indicates that the structure of Matter may be such as to denote that in its present form it has had a beginning and may have an end.

A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, Int., p. 7.

2†. Security; assurance; guaranty; warrant.

The stamp was a warranty of the public.

Locke.

3. In law, a statement, express or implied, of something which the party making it undertakes shall be part of the contract and in confirmation or assurance of a direct object of the contract, but which is yet only collateral to that object. More specifically—(a) In the law of real property: (1) Formerly, a covenant in a grant of freehold, binding the grantor and his heirs to supply other lands of equal value, should the grantee be evicted from those granted by any paramount title. (2) In modern practice, an assurance in a deed that the premises are conveyed in fee simple absolute except as otherwise specified, the effect being that, if the title fail, the grantee is exonerated from paying any purchase-money remaining unpaid, or may recover damages, the grantor's heirs and devisees being liable to the extent only that they may have received assets from the grantor. (b) In the law of insurance, a statement on the part of the insured or the applicant for insurance, forming a part of the contract, and on the actual truth of which, irrespective of its materiality, the validity of the policy depends. (c) In the law of sales, an assurance or engagement by the seller, express or implied, that he will be answerable for the truth of some supposed quality of the thing sold, as its soundness, or its fitness for the buyer's purpose, or its title.—Collateral warranty, in old Eng. law, a warranty which did not come from the same ancestor from whom the lands would have descended, but descended in a line collateral to that of the land: distinguished from lineal warranty, where the land and the warranty were descended from the same ancestor.—General warranty, a warranty against the acts and claims of all persons whomsoever, as distinguished from a warranty against claims of specified persons, called special warranty.—Implied warranty, a warranty not expressed in the contract, but resulting by operation of law from the making of the contract: as, where one sells a thing in his possession, there is an implied warranty on his part that he has ownership.—Lineal warranty. See collateral warranty.—To vouch to warranty. See vouch.

warranty (wor'an-ti), v. t.; pret. and pp. warranted, ppr. warranting. [<warranty, n.] To warrant; guarantee.

The honourable captain there Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 4. 18.

war-whip (wâr'hwip), n. Same as scorpion, 5.
war-whoop (wâr'hôp), n. A whoop or yell of a particular intonation, raised as a signal for attack, and to strike terror into the enemy: used generally with reference to the American Indians.

Well-known and terrific war-whoop.

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxx.

They never raise the war-whoop here,

And never twang the bow.

Bryant, White-Footed Deer.

warwickite (wâr'wik-it), n. [< Warwick (see def.) + -ite².] A borotitanate of magnesium and iron, occurring in dark-brown to black acicular crystals embedded in granular lime-stone. Named from the locality of its occur-rence, near Warwick, New York.

warwolf¹, n. Same as werwolf.

warwolf² (wâr'wûlf), n. [< war¹ + wolf, or perhaps a particular use of warwolf¹, werwolf.] A military engine used in the early middle ages in the defense of fortresses.

He [Edward I.], with another engine named the warwolf, pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread, two vaunt-mures.

Canden, Remains, Artillery, p. 208.

The war-wolfs there

Hurl'd their huge stones.

Southey, Joan of Arc, viii.

war-worn (wâr'wôrn), a. Worn with military service: especially applied to a veteran soldier, or one grown old in arms.

The stout old general whose battles and campaigns are over, who has come home to rest his war-worn limbs, . . . what must be his feelings?

Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

wary¹ (wâr'i), a. [An extended form of ware¹ (< ware¹ + -y¹), perhaps orig. due to misreading the adv. warely as a trisyllable.] 1. Cautious of danger; carefully watching and guard-ing against deception, artifices, and dangers; watchful; on the alert against surprise or dan-ger; ever on one's guard.

Be wary then; best safety lies in fear.

Shak., Hamlet, l. 3. 43.

Are there none here?

Let me look round; we cannot be too wary.

Pletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 5.

All things work for good, and tend to make you more wary.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

2. Guarded; careful as to doing or not doing something; chary.

Yet this I can say, I was very wary of giving them occa-sion, by any unseasonly action, to make them averse to go-ing on pilgrimage.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

3. Characterized by caution; guarded.

And in

Wary hypocrisy lets slip her hand

Much farther than she seemed to understand.

J. Beaumont, Pyche, l. 156.

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking.

Shak., J. C. H. l. 15.

4. Prudent; circumspect; wise.

Neither is it safe, or warie, or indeed Christianly, that the French King, of a different Faith, should afford our nearest Allies as good protection as we.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii

= syn. careful, circumspect, etc. See list under cautious.

wary², v. t. Same as warry.

warysonet, n. Same as warison.

was (woz), v. [< ME. I was, wes, was, 2 were, 3 was, wes, was, pl. 1, 2, 3 were, were, were, waren, waren, weren, < AS. The impv. of the verb of which was is the pret. is contained, unrecognized, in the word wassail. The verb has no connection with is, which is a form of the verb represented by the theme am, nor with be; but it has come to be used to supply the preterit of the verb be. See *be*¹.] A verb-form used to supply the past tense of the verb be: as, I was, thou wast or wert, he was; we, you, or they were. In the subjunctive, I were, thou wert, he were; we, you, they were, etc.

In war was never lion raged more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild.
Shak., Rich. II., li. 1. 178.

A scene which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me.
Byron, Childe Harold, li. 55 (song).
Nay, nay, God wot, so thou wert nobly born Thou hast a pleasant presence.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

The forms wast and wert in the second person singular of the indicative (cf. Isel. wert), and wert in the second person singular of the subjunctive, are modern, being conformed to the model of art. The older form of the second person singular in both moods is were. The ungrammatical combination you was became common in the eighteenth century, but is now condemned.

I was sorry you was disappointed of going to Vallombrosa. H. Walpole, To the Misses Berry, Sept. 25th, 1791.

As I told you when you was here.
Cooper, To Rev. W. Unwin, June 8, 1780.

They weschen hym and wyped hym and wonden hym in cloutes.
Piers Plouman (B), li. 220.

Hir forehead shoon as bright as any day,
So was it waschen whan she leet hir werk.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 125.

The maiden her self wash his visage and his necke, and dried it full softly with a towale, and than after to the tother tway kynges.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), li. 225.

He took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person.
Mat. xxvii. 24.

2. Hence, to free from ceremonial defilement, or from the stains of guilt, sin, or corruption; purify.

And thei suffre not the Latynes to syngen at here Awteres: And zif thei done, be ony Aventure, anon thei waschen the Awterer with holy Watre.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 19.

Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.
Ps. li. 2.

3. To wet copiously, as with water or other liquid; moisten; cover with moisture.

The pride of Italy, that did bestow
On Earth a beauty, washt by silver Po.
Sandys, Travels, p. 2.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly washed with dew.
Shak., T. of the S., li. 1. 174.

4. To lap; lave, as by surrounding water; surround; overflow or dash over or against; sweep, as with flowing water.

Galatia . . . on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea the space of two hundred and fiftie miles.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 321.

5. To remove by ablation or by the cleansing action of water; dispel by or as by washing; either literally or figuratively: used with away, off, out, etc.

Go get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Shak., Macbeth, li. 2. 47.

Be baptised and wash away thy sins. Acts xxi. 16.

Wash the black from the Ethiop's face,
Wash the past out of man or race!
Lovell, Villa Franca.

6. To overwhelm and carry along (in some specified direction) by or as by a rush of water: as, a man washed overboard; debris washed up by the storm; roast beef washed down with ale.

These dainties must be washed downe well with wine,
With sacke & sugar, egges & muscadine.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 87.

I don't want my wreck to be washed up on one of the beaches in company with devil's-aprons, bladder-weeds, dead horse-shoes, &c.
O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, vii.

7. To cover with a watery or thin coat of color; tint lightly, thinly, or evenly, in water-color, with a pigment so mixed as to be very fluid and rapidly and smoothly applied.—8. To overlay with a thin coat or deposit of metal: as, to wash copper or brass with gold.

Those who were cunning in "the Art of making Black Dogs, which are Shillings, or other pieces of Money made only of Pewter, double Wash'd."
J. Ashton, Social Life in the Reign of Queen Anne, li. 225.

9. In mining, metal, etc., to separate from the earthy and lighter matters by the action of water: as, to wash gold; to wash ores. Washing is a common expression used in the most general way, as nearly an equivalent for ore-dressing, or the separation of ore from the gangue with which it is generally mixed. The term washing is, however, more especially used to designate the separation of gold from the detrital formation in which it so frequently occurs. The same term is also commonly employed to designate the process of separating coal from various impurities, which frequently occur intermingled with it, such as shale, pyrites, argillaceous iron ore, gypsum, etc. The machines by which this is done are called coal-washers, as machines for washing gold are called gold-washers. Washing is also the term in general use for designating the operation of cleansing the ore when, as is frequently the case, it comes from the mine mixed with clay or dirt (material which cannot properly be called gangue). This is a coarse operation, which is sometimes a necessary preliminary to the operations of sizing and dressing, or concentrating, as sometimes called.—To wash one's hands of. See hand.

II. intrans. 1. To perform the act of ablation on one's own person.

I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush or no. Shak., Cor., i. 9. 69.

2. To cleanse clothes in or with water.

I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 101.

3. To stand the operation of washing without being destroyed, spoiled, or injured: said both of fabrics and of dyes: as, a dress that will not wash; colors that do not wash well.

I had no idea your mousseline-de-laine would have washed so well. Why, it looks just out of the shop.
C. Reade, Love me Little, x.

4. Hence, to stand being put to the proof; stand the test; prove genuine, reliable, trustworthy, capable, or fit, when submitted to trial. [Colloq.]

He's got pluck somewhere in him. That's the only thing after all that'll wash, ain't it?

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, li. 2.

5. To be eroded, as by a stream, by rainfall, etc.

What kind of grass is best on a hill that washes?
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVII. 203.

6. To use washes or cosmetics.

Young Ladies who notoriously Wash and Paint, though they have naturally good Complexions.
Etherege, Man of Mode, li. 1.

7. To make a swish, swash, or swirl of the water: as, the shad are washing. See shad-wash.

wash (wosh), n. [ME. wash, < wash, v.] 1. The act or operation of cleansing by the application of water; a cleansing with water or other liquid: as, to give one's face a wash.

Though she may have done a hard day's wash, there's not a child ill within the street but Alice goes to offer to sit up.
Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, l.

A tub and a clothes-horse at the other end of the kitchen indicated an intermittent wash of small things also going on.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, li. 24.

2. Articles in the course of being cleansed by washing, or the quantity of clothes or other articles washed on one occasion.

Military washes flapped and fluttered on the fences.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, etc., p. 23.

3. The flow or sweep of a body of water; the onward rush of water as its billows break upon the shore; the dash or break of waves upon a shore.

Katie walks
By the long wash of Australasian seas.
Tennyson, The Brook.

4. The rough or broken water left behind by a vessel as it moves along: as, the wash of the steamer nearly filled the boat.—5. The lapping or lapping noise made by rippling water as it comes in contact with a boat, a pier, the strand, or the like; the swish-swash of water disturbed as by wind or by ebb or flow.

The water ebbs away with a sulky wash in the hollow places.
R. D. Blackmore, Maid of Sker, lii.

6. A piece of ground washed by the action of the sea or river, or sometimes overflowed and sometimes left dry; a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea; also, a morass or marsh; a bog; a fen; a quagmire.

Half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln Washes have devoured them.
Shak., K. John, v. 6. 41.

7. Substances collected and deposited by the action of water, such as alluvium.

The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rainwater hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

The debris-piles which stretch along the lower slopes of the ranges in the Cordilleran Region are locally known as washes.
J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 125.

8. Waste liquor containing the refuse of food, collected from the cleansed dishes, etc., of a kitchen, such as is often given to pigs; swill or swillings.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar . . .
Swills your warm blood like wash.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 2. 9.

Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity swills
The tears of perjury, that lie there like wash
Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye.
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, li. 1.

9. In distilling: (a) The fermented wort, from which the spirit is extracted. The grain ground and infused is called the wash, the decanted liquor is called the wort, and the wort when fermented becomes the wash. (b) A mixture of dunder, molasses, scummings, and water, used in the West Indies for distillation. Bryan Edwards.—10. A liquid used for application to a surface or a body to cleanse it, color it, or the like—especially a thin and watery liquid, as distinguished from one that is glutinous or oily. Specifically—(a) A liquid used for toilet purposes, such as a cosmetic, a liquid dentifrice, or a hair-wash.

My eyes are none of the best since I have used the last new wash of mercury-water.
Wycherley, Love in a Wood, iv. 2.

It [modesty] renders the face delightfully handsome; is not subject to be rubbed off, and cannot be paralleled by either wash, powder, cosmetic, etc.

Addison, Spectator, No. 547.

(b) In med., a lotion. (c) A thin even coating of color spread over a surface, as of a painting. See def. 11.

There is no handsomeness

But has a wash of pride and luxury.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, lii. 8.

By this is seen who lives by faith and certain knowledge, and who by credulity and the prevailing opinion of the age; whose virtue is an unchangeable grain, and whose of a slight wash.
Milton, Church-Government, l. 7.

(d) In zool., a light or slight surface-coloration, as if laid over a ground-color; a superficial tone or tinge: as, a frosty wash over black. (e) A thin coat of metal applied to anything for beauty or preservation.

11. In water-color painting, the application of a pigment so mixed as to be in a very fluid condition, or a coat so applied. It is usually a very thin and transparent coat, applied quickly with a large brush, flat and often graded so as to be darker at one edge than at the opposite edge, or to shade off without mark of separation from one tint into another.

12. The blade of an oar.—13. A measure of shell-fish; a stamped measure capable of holding 21 quarts and a pint of water.

"I buy my winks," said one, "at Billingsgate, at 3s. and 4s. the wash." A wash is about a bushel.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 78.

Each smack takes about 40 wash of whelks with her for the voyage.
Encyc. Brit., IX. 256.

14. A fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on the stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. [Stock-exchange slang.]—Black wash. See black-wash.—Eye-wash, collyrium.—Rain-wash. (a) A washing along or away by the force of rain; displacement effected by rainfall.

He was sceptical as to the lacustrine origin of these breccias. Why not subaerial, like those in the interior of Asia?—subangular masses, transported by rainwash to a distance of 10 or 12 miles.

W. L. Blanford, Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. 28.

(b) That which is moved by the force of rain; a deposit formed by rain.

Portions of the drift and of the overlying head or rain-wash. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV, 116.

Red wash. (a) A lotion composed of corrosive sublimate, red sulphid of mercury, and crocus, in water. (b) Bates's camphorated water, made by adding copper sulphate, Armenian bole, and camphor to boiling water, and then straining.—Tooth-wash, a liquid dentifrice.—White wash, Goulard's lotion; lead-water.—Yellow wash, a lotion prepared by dissolving 30 grains of corrosive sublimate in one pint of lime-water.

wash (wosh), v. [*< wash, v. (cf. washy); perhaps < wars for wearish.] Washy; weak; easily losing its qualities.

Faith, 'tis but a wash scent.

Mareton, What you Will, l. 1.

Their bodies of so weak and wash a temper.

Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 1.

'Tis a wash knave; he will not keep his flesh well.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

washable (wosh'ā-bl), a. [< wash + -able.] Resisting or enduring washing: noting the fabric, and also the color.

Like washable beaver hats that improve with rain, his nerves were rendered stouter and more vigorous by showers of tears. Dickens, Oliver Twist, xxxvii.

wash-back (wosh'bak), n. In distilling, a cistern or vat in which the wort is fermented to form the wash. E. H. Knight.

wash-ball (wosh'bāl), n. A ball of soap sometimes combined with cosmetics.

We furnish'd ourselves with wash-balls, the best being made here, and being a considerable commodity.

Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

wash-basin (wosh'bā'sn), n. A large basin or bowl in which to wash the hands and face.

wash-basket (wosh'bās'ket), n. A circular shallow basket holding about a peck, with a bail handle, used in oystering. [Rhode Island.]

wash-bear (wosh'bār), n. [= G. Waschbär.] The racoon or washing-bear. See cut under racoon.

wash-beetle (wosh'bē'tl), n. A pounder used to beat or pound clothes in the process of washing. E. H. Knight.

wash-board (wosh'bōrd), n. 1. A board or wooden frame having a ribbed or corrugated surface of sheet-metal, vulcanite, earthenware, or wood, used as a scrubber in washing clothing by hand.—2. Naut., a broad thin plank sometimes fixed on the top of the gunwale of a boat or other small vessel's side, to prevent the sea from breaking over; also, a piece of plank on the sill of a lower deck port, for the same purpose. Also called waste-board.—3. A board carried around the walls of a room at the bottom. Also called mopboard, skirting-board.

To stand looking out of the study-window at the rain, and kicking his foot against the wash-board in solitude.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, II. 3.

wash-boiler (wosh'boi'lēr), n. A vessel of sheet-metal in which clothes to be washed are boiled.

wash-bottle (wosh'bot'l), n. 1. In chem., a flask provided with a stopper and tubes so arranged that by blowing with the mouth the water or other liquid in the flask may be forced out in a small stream for washing chemical preparations and utensils.—2. A bottle partly filled with water or other washing fluid through which gases are passed to purify them.

wash-bowl (wosh'bōl), n. 1. A large bowl or basin used for washing the hands, face, etc.

Emerson alone took no part in this "storm in a wash-bowl."

Quarterly Rev., CXLV, 132.

2†. A wash-tub.

Education is not form'd upon Sounds and Syllables, but upon Circumstances and Quality. So that, if he was resolv'd to have shown her thus unpolish'd, he should have made her keep Sheep, or brought her up at the Wash-Bowl. Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 222.

wash-brew (wosh'brō), n. The dish usually known as flummery or (as in Scotland) sowens. [Prov. Eng.] wash-cloth (wosh'klōth), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing, as in washing dishes or the person.

wash-day (wosh'dā), n. The day set apart in a household for clothes-washing.

wash-dirt (wosh'dért), n. In placer and hydraulic mining, sand or gravel containing, or supposed to contain, gold enough to pay for washing. Also wash-stuff, wash-gravel.

washdish (wosh'dish), n. The dish-washer or wagtail. Also molly or polly washdish. See cut under wagtail. [Local, Eng.] wash-drawing (wosh'drā'ing), n. See drawing. washed (wosh't), a. 1. That has been subjected to washing, in any sense.—2. Of the nature of a "wash": applied on the exchanges to a mere transfer by a broker of the stock or commodity which one principal had instructed him to sell to another customer who had given instructions to purchase a similar quantity of the same stock or commodity. [Stock-exchange slang.]

Washed or fictitious sales are positively forbidden, and will render the parties concerned liable to suspension or expulsion from the Produce Exchange.

New York Produce Exchange Report, 1888-9, p. 265.

3. In zool., overlaid, as a surface or a ground-color, with a wash or light tint or color: as, a fox's black pelt washed with silver. See wash, n., 10 (d).—Washed brick. See brick 2.

washet. An obsolete past participle of wash. Chaucer.

washer (wosh'ēr), n. [< wash + -er.] 1. One who or that which washes: as, a washer of clothes; a dish-washer; a wool-washer.—2. An annular piece of leather, rubber, metal, or other material placed at a joint in a water-pipe or faucet to make the joint tight and prevent leakage, or over a bolt, or a similar piece upon which a nut may be screwed. Washers serve as cushions or packing between many parts of machines, rails, vehicles, and iron structures. When used in buildings at the ends of tie-rods, they are often of large size and diverse shapes, and are called specifically wall-washers. Some forms are used as locks, to prevent a nut from shaking loose, as in a railroad fish-plate. Such washers are made in the shape of a spring, to allow a certain amount of vibration without disturbing the nut. See lock-nut, and cuts under bolt, packing, and plug-cock.

3. A similar article forming an ornament, as at the socket or pin that holds any adjustable utensil: as, the mother-of-pearl washers of a fan. Compare rosette.—4. In paper-manuf., a straining-and-washing machine used in the process of cleaning rags, to bring them to a pulpy condition; a beating-engine.—5. In plumbing, the outlet of a cistern. It includes the pipe, the joint or union, and the plug, as for a basin.—6. A washing-machine: as, a clothes-washer, window-washer, gold-washer.—7. In coal-mining (short for coal-washer), any machine for washing coal. In the Pennsylvania anthracite region the coal is sometimes washed by jets of water, and separated from the slate, pyrites, and other refuse by jigging. The number of machines which have been invented in different countries for washing coal is very great, but most of them are based on some form or modification of the jig of the metal-miner.

8. The wagtail, a bird. Also dish-washer, peggy dish-washer, molly-washer, molly or polly wash-dish, wash-tail, nunny wash-tail, etc. See cut under wagtail.—9. The wash-bear.—Beveled washer. See beveled.

washer (wosh'ēr), v. t. [< washer, n.] To fit with washers.

I had worked myself up, as I always do, in the manner of heavy men; growing hot like an ill-washed wheel revolving, though I start with a cool axle.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxx.

He washed the knobs of the doors that had a rattling play whenever handled. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV, 160.

washer-cutter (wosh'ēr-kut'ēr), n. A rotating cutting-tool with two adjustable cutters, worked by a hand-brace or by a drill, and used for cutting out annular disks for washers. E. H. Knight.

washer-gage (wosh'ēr-gāj), n. A graduated tapering rule used for measuring the diameter of bolts, nuts, and washers, and of holes, etc., to receive them.

washer-hoop (wosh'ēr-hōp), n. In a water-wheel, a gasket placed between the flange and the curb. E. H. Knight.

washerman (wosh'ēr-mān), n.; pl. washermen (men). A man who washes clothes, etc.—Washermen's itch. Same as dhobie's itch (which see, under dhobie).

washerwoman (wosh'ēr-wīm'wūn), n.; pl. washerwomen (-wīm'wūn). 1. A woman who washes clothes for others or for hire.—2. The dish-washer or washdish, a wagtail. See cut under wagtail.—Washerwomen's itch or scall, a variety of psoriasis occurring on the hands of washerwomen.

wash-gilding (wosh'gil'ding), n. Gilding by means of an amalgam of gold from which the mercury is afterward driven off by heat. Also called mercurial gilding, and water-gilding, in allusion to the semi-liquid character of the amalgam.

wash-gravel (wosh'grav'el), n. Same as wash-dirt.

wash-hand basin (wosh'hand bā'sn), n. Same as wash-bowl.

wash-hand stand (wosh'hand stand), n. Same as wash-stand.

He . . . locked the door, piled a washhand-stand, chest of drawers, and table against it.

Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvi.

wash-house (wosh'hous), n. [*ME. waschhous, < AS. wæsc-hus, < wascan, wash, + hūs, house; as wash + house.] A house, generally fitted with boilers, tubs, etc., for washing clothes, etc.; a washing-house.

washiness (wosh'i-ness), n. The state of being washy, watery, or worthless; want of strength.

washing (wosh'ing), n. [< ME. wasching, waschyng, < wæssinge, waschunge, < AS. wæssing, washing, verbal n. of wascan, wash: see wash, v.] 1. The act of cleansing with water; ablution. Ceremonial washing has been practised in ancient and modern times and among various peoples. The principal ceremonial washings in the modern Christian church are two: washing of feet, in commemoration of the washing of the feet of the disciples by Christ (see foot); and washing of the hands, especially in connection with the celebration of the eucharist. In the Western Church, as well as in the Greek and other Oriental churches, the priest washes his hands before celebration. In the Western Church he also washes his fingers after the offertory and at the end of the eucharistic office. See ablution, lavabo, purification, and holy water (under water).

John wondered why the Messias, the Lamb of God, pure and without spot, who needed not the abstersions of repentance, or the washings of baptism, should demand it. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I, 95.

2. Clothes washed, especially those washed at one time; a wash.—3. The result of washing; that which is washed from something else, as gold dust.—To give one's head for washing, to submit to insult.

So am I, and forty more good fellows, that will not give their heads for the washing, I take it.

Ben Jonson, Cupid's Revenge, iv. 3.

washing-bear (wosh'ing-bār), n. The wash-bear or racoon, Procyon lotor: so called from its habit of putting its food into water before eating it, as if to wash it. See lotor, and cut under racoon.

washing-crystals (wosh'ing-kris'talz), n. pl. See sodium carbonate, under sodium.

washing-drum (wosh'ing-drum), n. In mining, same as washing-trommel.

washing-engine (wosh'ing-en'jin), n. In paper-manuf., the first of the series of rag-cutting and -cleaning machines used to reduce rags to pulp. It cleans the rags and cuts them to the size known as half-stuff, which is passed on to the beating-engine. See rag-engine. E. H. Knight.

washing-gourd (wosh'ing-görd), n. Same as sponge-gourd.

washing-house (wosh'ing-hous), n. A wash-house.

washing-machine (wosh'ing-mā-shēn'), n. An apparatus, operated by hand or steam-power, for washing clothing, fabrics, wool, or other material; a clothes-washer. Washing-machines for domestic and laundry use have been made in the form of churns, rubbing- or beating-machines, and tumbling-boxes. While a great variety of machines have been introduced, all depend essentially upon some mechanical device for stirring and beating the clothes in a vessel containing hot soapy water. Rubbing the clothes against a ribbed surface under water appears to be the most common method. For bleaches and mills where large quantities of fabrics are to be washed, the material is made up into continuous bands, and is drawn through vats over rollers. In some machines beaters are used to assist in cleaning the fabrics. Such machines are of the nature of lucking-machines, keirs, winnowing-machines, and dash-wheels. Washing-machines are designed to be used with wringers. One form for domestic use is practically a form of wringer, the clothes being cleaned by drawing them between rollers of corrugated rubber.

washing-powder (wosh'ing-pou'dēr), n. A powdered preparation (as of soda-ash and Scotch soda) used in washing clothes.

washing-rollers (wosh'ing-rō'lērz), n. pl. Rollers for squeezing goods or yarn after scouring. They are of cast-iron, turned true and smooth. The requisite pressure is applied by means of compound levers or movable weights. E. H. Knight.

washing-shield (wosh'ing-shēld), n. In washing, a ridged or corrugated shield for the palm of the hand, or a shield at once to protect the person and supply a surface on which to rub the clothes. E. H. Knight.

Washington canvasback. Same as redhead, 2.

Washington cedar. 1. See cedar, 2, and cut under Sequoia.—2. Thuja gigantea. See Thuja.

Washingtonia (wosh-ing-tō'ni-ā), n. [NL. (Wendland, 1879), named after George Washington (1732-99), first President of the United States.] A genus of palms, of the tribe Corypheæ. It is characterized by bisexual flowers with slightly imbricated segments, and a three-lobed ovary with elongated filiform style. The albumen of the seed is uniform, like that of the related genera Corypha and Sabal, but the embryo, unlike the others, is sub-basilar. There is but one species clearly known, W. filifera, native of southern California and the adjacent border, called desert-palm, and locally fan-palm and San Diego palm. It produces a tall robust cylindrical trunk, enlarged at the base, often 40, sometimes 75, feet high, crowned by a cluster of light-green circular plicate leaves with from 40 to 60 folds about 4 feet across, cleft nearly to the middle into induplicate segments fringed with fine white pendulous threads often a foot long. The stout leafstalk ends in a large appressed ligule, is about 8 feet long, and is set with strong, hooked spines along its edges. The mature tree bears in June three or four smooth elongated paniculate spadices with very many slender flexuous branchlets. The small dry flowers are white, sessile, and persistent without change, the corolla salver-shaped with a fleshy tube and sharp lanceolate lobes, and the six projecting stamens have large filaments and anthers. A single spadix 8 feet long hangs pendent at ripening, in September or October, bearing about ten pounds of small black ellipsoidal one-celled fruits, each with a single shining brown bony seed surrounded by a thin sweetish pulpy pericarp. This is the only arborescent palm in the United States far from the sea; it occurs there chiefly in the desert in San Diego county, California; in Lower California it approaches the coast. It was discovered by Dr. C. C. Parry, 1849-50; it is now frequent in cultivation, especially along the California coast, often under the name of Pritchardia filamentosa or Brahea filifera; when very young, it is valued in America as a house-plant. Since 1875 it has been grown by thousands along the Mediterranean near Nice for outdoor decoration, where the characteristic appearance after twelve years' growth is that of a huge bulbous trunk, often 10 feet in girth and 10 feet high, bearing a crown of foliage 20 feet across, composed of from 50 to 80 white-fringed leaves. It varies greatly in habit with age. It has been known to blossom at twenty-two years; one fifty years old was 58 feet high and 11 feet in girth. At maturity, its older leaves turn down, and cover the trunk with a dry thatch, a protection from the desert heat and winds, but burning so readily that it forms a source of danger from fire. The W. robusta of cultivation, peculiar in its reddish petiole-bases, is now considered a variety of the foregoing; W. Sonore of Mexico, with deep crimson-brown petioles and stems, is said to be distinct.

Washingtonian (wosh-ing-tō-ni-an), a. and n. [< Washington (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. Pertaining or relating to George Washington (1732-1799), first President of the United States, or to Washington, the capital of the United States, or to Washington, one of the United States, named after him.

II. n. An inhabitant of Washington, the capital of the United States, or of Washington, one of the United States.

washingtonite (wosh'ing-ton-it), n. [< Washington (see def.) + -ite.] A variety of ilmenite found near Washington in Litchfield county, Connecticut.

Washington lily, thorn. See lily, 1, and thorn 1 (with cut).

washing-trommel (wosh'ing-trom'el), n. A trommel used for washing ores. A washing-trommel consists usually of a cylinder of sheet-iron from 5 to 10 feet long, which turns on its axis, and through which a copious stream of water flows, the stuff as it passes out being caught on one or more perforated sheet-iron screens, by which the clayey particles are separated from the ore, and this latter sometimes roughly sorted. The form and arrangement of washing-trommels vary considerably according to the character of the ore and of the impurities with which it is mixed. See trommel. Also washing-drum.

washing-up (wosh'ing-up), n. In mining, same as clean-up, 2. Also washing-off (Australia).

washing-vessel (wosh'ing-ves'el), n. [< ME. waschyng vessel; < washing + vessel.] A vessel to wash in. Prompt. Parv., p. 517.

wash-leather (wosh'leth'er), n. A fine white or light-yellow, very soft, and flexible leather, originally made from the skins of Rupicapra tragus, the Alpine chamois. Leather very closely resembling it in all its properties is now made from skins of sheep, goats, deer, calves, and from split hides, the coarser qualities being known as wash-leather. The skins are limed to remove the hair, steeped in a weak solution of lactic or acetic acid to neutralize the lime, and then frizzed or rubbed with pumice-stone or a blunt knife to remove the grain. Repeated fulling by pounding or rolling in oil, washing with weak alkaline solution to remove the oil, stretching, drying, and smoothing complete the process of manufacture.

The greengrocer put on a pair of wash-leather gloves to hand the plates with. Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvii.

washman (wosh'man), n.; pl. washmen (-men). 1. A washerman.—2. A beggarman covered with simulated sores. [Old cant.]

A Washman is called a Palliard, but not of the right making. He vaeth to lye in the hye way with lame or sore legs or armes to beg. These men ye right Palliards will often times spoile, but they dare not complain. They be bitten with Spickworts, and sometime with rats bane. Fraternity of Vagabonds (1561), quoted in Ribbott.

washout (wosh'out), n. [< wash out: see under wash, v.] The excavation, by erosive action of water, of a part of a road-bed, the bank of a stream, a hillside, or the like; also, the hole or break resulting from such excavation.

The rains and torrents cutting away the land into channels, which at first are merely wash-outs, and at last grow into deep canyons. T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 158.

wash-pot (wosh'pot), n. 1. A vessel prepared for the washing of anything. Ps. lx. 8.—2. In tin-plate manuf., a pot kept filled with clean bright melted tin, in which each sheet of iron, after it has left the tin-pot and had the superfluous metal removed from it with a hempen brush, receives its final coating of tin. From the wash-pot the sheet passes to the "patent-pot," and from this to the steel rollers by which the coating of tin is made smooth and uniform. This is the modern method of manufacture, now almost universally followed in Wales.

wash-rag (wosh'rag), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing the person.

She employed the interval while her guests were at their luncheon in plying the wash-rag and comb, to such good effect that Cinderella suffered no greater transformation at the hands of the fairy godmother.

E. L. Byrner, Begum's Daughter, iv.

wash-stand (wosh'stand), n. A piece of furniture like a table, with or without a lower shelf, drawers, and a back, arranged to hold a basin and ewer and other appurtenances for washing the person. Since the introduction of elaborate plumbing, the name is given also to the set or fixed wash-bowl, with a marble slab above, and wooden inclosure or support of the basin and pipes, with the faucets, and other conveniences.

I returned, sought the sponge on the washstand, the salts in my drawer, and once more retraced my steps.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

watap, watapah (wot'ap, wot'a-pe), n. [Amer. Ind.] The long slender roots of the white spruce, Picea alba, which are used by canoe-makers in northwestern North America for binding together the strips of birch-bark.

watch (woch), n. [ME. wacche, wecche, < AS. wæcce, watch, watching, < wacan, wake: see wake¹.] 1*t.* The state of being awake; wakefulness.

To lie in watch there and to think on him.

Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 43.

2. A keeping awake for the purpose of attending, guarding, or preserving; attendance without sleep; preservative or preventive vigilance; vigil.

Travellers always lie in the boat, and keep a watch to defend themselves against any attack.

Pococke, Description of the East, I. 70.

We were told to keep good watch here all night, that there were troops of robbers on the east-side of the water who had lately plundered some boats.

Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 84.

3. A wake. See wake¹, n., 2.

Oon cresset . . . to be born biforn the Baillies of the seid cite [Worcester], in the Vigille of the nativite of Seynt John Baptiste, at the comyn Wacche of the seid cite; and the wardens of the seid crafte, and alle the hole crafte, shallen wayte yppon the seid Baillies in the seid Vigille, at the seid Wacche, in their best arraye harnessid.

English Guilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 408.

4. Close, constant observation; vigilant attention; careful, continued notice; supervision; vigilance; outlook: as, to be on the watch.

When I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way with more advised watch,

To find the other forth. Shak., M. of V., I. 1. 142.

There [the trout] lies at the watch for any fly or minnow that comes near to him.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 75.

Nor could he otherwise account for the Judge's quiescent mood than by supposing him craftily on the watch, while Clifford developed these symptoms of a distracted mind.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

5. A person, or number of persons, whose duty it is to watch over the persons, property, or interests of others; a watchman, or body of watchmen; a sentinel; a sentry; guard.

Such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,

And beat our watch, and rob our passengers.

Shak., Rich. II., v. 3. 8.

Home in a coach, round by the Wall, where we met so many stops by the Watches that it cost us much time and some trouble, and more money, to every Watch, to them to drink.

Peppys, Diary, III. 410.

6. The period of time during which one person or body of persons watch or stand sentinel, or the time from one relief of sentinels to another; hence, a division of the night, when the precautionary setting of a watch is most generally necessary; period of time; hour. The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which each separate body of sentinels remained on duty. The proper Jewish reckoning recognized only three such watches: the first (lasting from sunset till about 10 P. M.), the second or middle watch (10 P. M. to 2 A. M.), and the third, or morning watch (from 2 A. M. till sunrise). After the establishment of the Roman power they were increased to four, which were named as first, second, etc., or by the terms even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning, these terminating respectively at 9 P. M., midnight, 3 A. M., and 6 A. M.

7. Naut.: (a) The period of time occupied by each part of a ship's crew alternately while on duty. The period of time called a watch is four hours, the reckoning beginning at noon or midnight. Between 4 and 8 P. M. the time is divided into two short watches, or dog-watches, in order to prevent the constant recurrence of duty to the same portion of the crew during the same hours. Thus, the period from 12 to 4 P. M. is called the afternoon watch, from 4 to 8 the first dog-watch, from 8 to 12 the second dog-watch, from 12 to 4 A. M. the first night watch, from midnight to 4 A. M. the middle watch, from 4 to 8 the morning watch, and from 8 to 12 noon the forenoon watch. When this alternation of watches is kept up during the 24 hours, it is termed having watch and watch, in distinction from keeping all hands at work during one or more watches.

After 2. or 3. watches more we were in 24. fadoms.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 112.

(b) A certain part of the officers and crew of a vessel who together attend to working her for an allotted time. The crew of every vessel while at sea is generally divided into two parts: the starboard watch, which in the merchant service is the captain's watch, and is often commanded by the second mate; and the port or larboard watch, which in the merchant service is commanded by the chief mate. In the British and United States navies these watches are commanded by the lieutenants successively. The anchor-watch is a small watch composed of one or two men appointed to look after the ship while at anchor or in port.

8. Anything by which the progress of time is perceived and measured. (a) A candle marked out into sections, each of which required a certain time to burn.

Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch.

Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 63.

(b) A small portable timepiece or timekeeper that may be worn on the person, operated by power stored in a coiled spring, and capable of keeping time when held in any position. Watches were invented at Nuremberg about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and for a long time the wearing of a watch was considered in some degree a mark or proof of gentility. Thus Malvolio remarks in anticipation of his great fortune:

I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel. Shak., T. N., II. 5. 66.

The new contrivance of applying precious stones to watches I had the good fortune to see when Mr. Facio, the inventor, and an ingenious man, and Mr. Debaufre, the workman, presented their watches, to have the approbation of the Royal Society.

W. Derham (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 173).

A friend of mine had a watch given him when he was a boy, a "bull's eye," with a loose silver case that came off like an oyster-shell from its contents; you know them—the cases that you hang on your thumb, while the core, or the real watch, lies in your hand as naked as a peeled apple.

O. W. Holmes, Professor, II.

9. pl. A name of the trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava, probably alluding to the resemblance of the flowers to watches.—10. In pottery, a trial piece of clay so placed in a kiln that it can be readily withdrawn to enable the workmen to judge by its appearance of the heat of the fire and the condition of the ware remaining in the saggers.—11. In hawking, a company or flight, as of nightingales.—Beat of a watch. See beat¹.—Duplex watch, a watch having two sets of teeth upon the rim of its escapement-wheel.—Officer of the watch. See watch-officer.—Paddy's watch. Same as paddyhack, s.—Parish watch. See parish.—The Black Watch, a semi-military organization in Edinburgh, Scotland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. From this a regiment of the British army was afterward formed, and the name was ultimately given to the 42d and 73d regiments, which are now the 1st and 2d Battalions of the Black Watch or Royal Highlanders.—To muster the watch. See muster.—To stand a watch. See stand.—Watch and ward, the old custom of watching by night and by day in towns and cities. English writers up to the seventeenth century recognize a distinction between watch and ward, the former being used to signify a watching and guarding by night, and the latter a watching, guarding, and protecting by day. Hence, when the terms were used in combination, especially in the phrase to keep watch and ward, they implied a continuous and uninterrupted watching and guarding, constant vigilance and protection by night and by day.

It ys the Strongest towne of walls, towers, Bulwerks, watches and wardes that ever I saw in all my lyff.

Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 16.

I sawe at the towne of Braxima all the artillerie brought together to y^e gates of your house; I saw watch and ward kept round about your lodging.

Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 246.

watch (woch), v. [ME. wacchen, wecchen, < AS. wæccan, watch, wake: see wake¹, v., and cf. watch, n.] 1. intr. 1. To be awake; be or continue without sleep; keep vigil.

But if necessitie compell you to watch longer then ordinary, then be sure to augment your sleepe the next morning.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

As soon as I am dead,

Come all and watch one night about my hearse.

Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, II. 1.

2. To be attentive, circumspect, or vigilant; be closely observant; notice carefully; give heed.

Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.

Mat. xvi. 41.

The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.
Shak., Othello, II. 1. 219.

4. To look forward with expectation; be expectant; seek opportunity; wait.—5. To act as attendant or nurse on the sick by night; remain awake to give attendance, assistance, or the like: as, to watch with a patient in a fever.—6. To float on the surface of the water: said of a buoy.—To watch over, to be cautiously observant of; inspect; superintend and guard from error and danger; keep guard over.

Watch over thyself, counsel thyself, judge thyself impartially.

Jer. Taylor.

There is abundant cause to think that every town in which the Lord Jesus Christ is worshipped hath an angel to watch over it.

C. Mather, Mag. Chris., Hist. Boston.

II. trans. 1. To look with close attention at or on; keep carefully and constantly in view or supervision; keep a sharp lookout on or for; observe, notice, or regard with vigilance and care; keep an eye upon.

Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus.

Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 230.

They are singled out, and all opportunities watched against them.

Bacon, Political Fables, I, Expl.

When Pitt entered Parliament, the whole political world was attentively watching the progress of an event which soon added great strength to the Opposition.

Macaulay, William Pitt.

2. To have in keeping; tend; guard; take care of.

Flaming ministers to watch and tend

Their earthly charge. Milton, P. L., ix. 156.

Lord Brampton. Charges? For what?

Sable. First, Twenty Guinea to my Lady's Woman for notice of your Death (a Fee I've before now known the Widow herself go halves in), but no matter for that. In the next place, Ten Pounds for watching you all your long Fit of Sickness last Winter.

Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, II. 1.

Paria watch'd the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broome.

3. To look for; wait for.

We will stand and watch your pleasure.

Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 249.

4*t.* To take or detect by lying in wait; surprise.

Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now.

Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 107.

5. In falconry, to keep awake; keep from sleep, as a hawk, for the purpose of exhausting and taming it.

My lord shall never rest;

I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience.

Shak., Othello, III. 3. 23.

watch-bell (woch'bel), n. 1. An alarm-bell.

They [Russian travelers] report that the Land of Mugalla reaches from Boghar to the north sea, and hath many Castles built of Stone four-square, with Towers at the Corners cover'd with glazed Tiles; and on the Gates Alarum Bells, or Watch-Bells, twenty pound weight of Metal.

Milton, Hist. Moscovia, III.

2. The bell which is struck every half-hour on board ship to mark the time. Now called ship's bell.

watch-bill (woch'bil), n. A list of the officers and crew of a ship, as divided into watches, together with the several stations to which the men respectively belong.

watch-birth (woch'berth), n. [< watch, v., + obj. birth.] A midwife. [Rare.]

Th' eternal Watch-births of thy sacred Wit.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Magnificence.

watch-box (woch'box), n. A sentry-box.

watch-candle (woch'kan'dl), n. Same as watching-candle.

Were it not better for a man in a fair room to set up one great light, or branching candlestick of lights, than to go about with a small watch candle into every corner?

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, I. 45.

watchcase (woch'käs), n. 1. The outer case for a watch. Formerly it was often a hinged cover or box fitted closely over the watch proper, and having openings through which the dial appeared and the stem or ring projected. In modern watches this feature is generally absent, and the watchcase is the metal cover, usually of gold or silver, which incloses the works.

We now never see watch-cases made of other materials than the precious metals, or imitations thereof; but then [reign of Queen Anne] beautiful cases were made of shagreen of various colours, or tortoiseshell inlaid or studded with gold.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 159.

2. Same as watch-pocket.—3*t.* A sentry-box. [Rare.]

O thou dull god [sleep], why leest thou with the vile

In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch

A watch-case, or a common 'larum-bell?

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 1. 17.

watchcase-cutter (woch'käs-kut'er), n. A machine for cutting hinge-recesses in watchcases. E. H. Knight.

watch-clock (woch'klok), n. 1*t.* An alarum.

Powrful need (Arts ancient Dame and Keeper,

The early watch-clock of the sloathfull sleeper).

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Handy-Crafts.

2. A timepiece used as a time-detector or time-reporter for a watchman. It is made in many forms. One kind is a small portable clock that must be carried by the watchman to different stations on his rounds. At each station a special key fastened to a chain must be used to make a mark on a paper dial inside the clock, thus making a record of the performance of his duty. Another form consists of a fixed clock, having a key that must be touched to make the record, a clock being placed at each station. Another and now more common form is a clock placed at a central station, and connected by wires with the place where the watchman makes his rounds; at each station the watchman touches a push-button to close the circuit and print a mark on a dial in the clock.

watch-dog (woch'dog), n. A dog kept to watch or guard premises and property.

'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home.
Byron, Don Juan, l. 123.

watcher (woch'er), n. One who or that which watches. Specifically—(a) One who sits up and continues awake; one who lies awake.

Get on your nightgown, best occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.
Shak., Macheth, ll. 2, 71.

(b) One who keeps awake for the purpose of guarding or attending upon something or some one; a nurse, watchman, sentry, or the like.

On the frontiers . . . were set watchmen and watchers in dyuers manners.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. xlix.

A charr'd and wrinkled piece of womanhood
Sat watching like a watcher by the dead.
Tennyson, Princess, v.

(c) One who observes: as, a watcher of the time.

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken.
Keats, Sonnets, xi.

(d) A spy; one sent to watch an enemy. Jer. iv. 16.

watchet (woch'et), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also watched; < ME. wachet, waget, wagett, vachet; prob. from an OF. form ult. connected with wood.] A light- or pale-blue color.

Celeste, azure, watchet, or skie-colour. Celeste, heuene-lle, celestiall. Also skie-colour or azure and watchet.
Florio.

Yelad he was ful smal and properly
Al in a kirtel of a lyght waget.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 135.

[There are MS. variations vachet, wagett, and wachet, of which the last only is in print.]

Their watchet mantles fringed with silver round.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 40.

The greater shippes were towed downe with boates and oares, and the mariners, being all apparelled in watchet or skie coloured clothe, rowed a maine, and made way with diligence.

Hakluyt's Voyages, quoted in R. Edon (First Books on America, ed. Arbor, p. xxxviii.).

His habit is antique, the stuffe Watchet and silver.
Dekker, London's Tempe.

watch-fire (woch'fir), n. A fire maintained during the night as a signal, or for the use of a watching party, guard, sentinels, etc.

watchful (woch'fūl), a. [watch + -ful.] 1†. Wakeful; sleepless.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night? Shak., J. C., ll. 1, 98.

2. Vigilant; careful; wary; cautious; observant; alert; on the watch: with of before the thing to be regulated or observed, and against before the thing to be avoided: as, to be watchful of one's behavior; to be watchful against the growth of vicious habits.

Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain.
Rev. iii. 2.

Watchful Servants to the Bagin come,
They're ne'er admitted to the Bathing-room.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

= Syn. 2. Watchful, Vigilant, Wakeful, attentive, heedful, circumspect, guarded. Wakeful refers to the lack of disposition to sleep, especially at times when one would ordinarily have such a disposition; watchful and vigilant refer to the mind, will, or conduct: they are of about equal vigor; watchful is the broader in its range of meaning.

watchfully (woch'fūl-i), adv. In a watchful manner; vigilantly; heedfully; with careful observation of the approach of evil, or with attention to duty.

watchfulness (woch'fūl-nes), n. The state or character of being watchful, in any sense.

watch-glass (woch'glās), n. 1. A sand-glass used to measure the time of a watch, as on shipboard: usually a half-hour glass.—2. A thin concavo-convex piece of glass used for covering the dial of a watch. Those made in recent times for watches that have not a double case, or hunting-case, are thicker, and have a peculiar flattened curve. Compare crystal, 2 (c).

watch-guard (woch'gärd), n. A chain, ribbon, or cord fastened to a watch, and either passed around the neck or secured to some part of the clothing.

watch-gun (woch'gun), n. A gun fired at the changing of the watch, as in a fortress or garrison, or on board a man-of-war.

watch-header (woch'hed'er), n. The officer in charge of a watch.

The divisions of the crew are known as the starboard and larboard watches, commanded respectively by the first and second mates or the second and third mates, who are known as watch-headers.
Fisheries of the U. S., V. ll. 229.

watch-house (woch'hous), n. 1. A house in which a watch or guard is placed.—2. A house where night-watchmen assemble previous to the hour at which they enter upon their respective beats, and where disturbers of the peace seized by them during the night are lodged and kept in custody till morning, when they are brought before a magistrate; a lockup.

At the Golden Ball and 2 Green Posts (There being a Hatch with Iron spikes at the door), near the Watch-House in Lambeth Marsh.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 118.

watching (woch'ing), n. [Verbal n. of watch, v.] A keeping awake; a vigil.

In watchings often. 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Watchings of flowers. Same as vigils of flowers (which see, under vigil).

watching-candle (woch'ing-kan'dl), n. The candle used at the watching or waking of a corpse.

Why should I twine my arms to cables, sit up all night like a watching-candle, and distill my brains through my eyelids?
Academy of Compliments (1714).

watch-jewel (woch'jū'el), n. A jewel, usually a ruby, in which is drilled a hole for an arbor, used in the works of a watch, to lessen friction and wear.

watch-key (woch'kē), n. A small key with a square tube to fit the winding-arbor of a watch, serving to wind the watch by coiling the mainspring.

watch-light (woch'lit), n. A light kept burning at night, as for the use of a watcher in the sick-room.

There's a star;
Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the wall.
Browning, Andrea del Sarto.

watchmaker (woch'mā'kēr), n. One whose occupation is to make and repair watches.—Watchmakers' cramp, a neurosis affecting watchmakers, in which, through irregular muscular action, it becomes impossible to hold in the eye-socket the lens with which they examine their work. Occasionally also the fingers are affected in a manner similar to what is observed in writers' cramp.—Watchmakers' drill. See Drill.

watchmaking (woch'mā'king), n. The art or operation of making watches; the business or occupation of a watchmaker.

watchman (woch'man), n.; pl. watchmen (-men). [< ME. waccheman; < watch + man.] A person set to keep watch; specifically, a sentinel; a guard; one who guards the streets of a city by night; also, one set to keep guard, as over a building in the night, to protect it from fire or thieves.

They went, and made the sepulchre sure with watchmen, and sealed the stone.
Tyndale (1526), Mat. xxvii. 66.

Watchman, what of the night?
Isa. xxi. 11.

Our watchmen from the towers, with longing eyes, Expect his swift arrival. Dryden, Spanish Friar, i. 1.
Who has not heard the Scowrer's Midnight Fame?
Who has not trembled at the Mohock's Name?
Was there a Watchman took his hourly Rounds Safe from their Blows or new invented Wounds?
Gay, Trivia, iii. 327.

Watchman's clock. See clock.

watch-mark (woch'märk), n. A mark worn on the right or the left arm of a man in the naval service according as he is stationed in the starboard or the port watch.

watch-meeting (woch'mē'ting), n. A religious meeting or religious services held on the last night of the year, and terminated on the arrival of the new year. See watch-night.

watchment (woch'ment), n. [< watch + -ment.] A watching; vigil; observation. [Rare.]

My watchments are now over, by my master's direction.
Richardson, Pamela, I. 171.

watch-night (woch'nit), n. The last night of the year, on which, in some churches, religious services are held till the advent of the new year.

watch-officer (woch'of'i-sēr), n. The officer in charge of the deck of a ship, who takes his turn with others in standing watches, during which time, subject to the authority of the commanding officer, he has charge of the ship. Also called officer of the watch.

watch-oil (woch'oil), n. A refined, very limpid and fluid lubricating-oil, used in oiling clocks and watches. Olive- or almond-oil after clarifying is much used for this purpose. Also clock-oil.

watch-paper (woch'pā'pēr), n. A small circle of paper, silk, muslin, or other material, inserted in the outer case of an old-fashioned watch, to prevent the metal from defacing the inner case. These papers were frequently cut with elaborate designs, or painted with miniatures or ciphers and devices. Those of textile fabrics were embroidered in silk, or with human hair. Commoner ones were printed with the head of some public character, or with some motto or sentiment.

watch-peel (woch'pēl), n. A watch-tower.

Watch-peels, castles, and towers looked out upon us as we walked.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, I.

watch-pocket (woch'pok'et), n. A small pocket in a garment for carrying a watch on the person; also, a pocket, bag, etc., in or on the head-curtain of a bed for holding the watch at night.

watch-pole (woch'pōl), n. The pole or truncheon carried by a watchman.

I know a gentleman that has several wounds in the head by watch-poles, and has been thrice run through the body to carry on a good jest. Steele, Spectator, No. 358.

watch-rate (woch'rāt), n. A rate authorized to be levied in England for watching and lighting a parish or borough.

watchspring (woch'spring), n. The mainspring of a watch.

watch-stand (woch'stand), n. A contrivance for holding the watch when it is not worn on the person, enabling the dial to be seen. The form is often that of a small clock-case, and the stands of the eighteenth century were frequently very rich, both in material and in workmanship.

watch-tackle (woch'tak'l), n. Naut., a small tackle consisting of a double and single block with a fall. Also called handy-billy.

By hauling every brace and bowline, and clapping watch-tackles upon all the sheets and halyards, we managed to hold our own. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 250.

watch-telescope (woch'tel'e-skōp), n. See telescope.

watch-tower (woch'tou'er), n. A tower on which a sentinel is placed to watch for enemies, for the approach of danger, etc.

I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the daytime. Isa. xxi. 8.

About a mile from the town there is a very high and strong watch tower. Coryat, Cruities, I. 10.

watchword (woch'wērd), n. [< ME. wacche-word; < watch + word.] 1. A word or short phrase to be communicated on challenge to the watch or sentinels in a camp; a password or signal by which friends can be known from enemies.

Wacche wordes to wale, that weghts might know.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 6056.

Hence—2. A preconcocted indication or a direction eagerly watched for, as a signal for action.

All have they eares upright, wayting when the watch-word shall come that they should all rise generally into rebellion.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

3. A word used as a motto, as expressive of a principle or rule of action; a maxim, byword, or rallying-cry.

"Now" is the constant syllable ticking from the clock of time. "Now" is the watchword of the wise. "Now" is on the banner of the prudent. Parr.

His watchword is honour, his pay is renown.
Scott, Rokeby, v. 20.

4†. The call of a watchman or sentry as he goes his rounds.

Since when a watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls to testify their vigilancy.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 10.

To set a watchword upon, to make proverbial; turn into a byword.

S. Paule himselfe (who yet for the credite of Poets) alledged twice two Poets, . . . setteth a watch-word upon Philosophy, indeede vpon the abuse. So dooth Plato, vpon the abuse, not vpon Poetrie. Plato found fault that the Poet of his time filled the world with wrong opinions of the Gods.
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

watchwork (woch'wērk), n. The machinery of a watch: now usually in the plural.

water, v. t. A form of craft. See wit.

water (wā'tēr), n. [< ME. water, watre, water, weter, < AS. wæter = OS. watar = OFries. weter, water = D. water = MLG. water = OHG. wazzar, MHG. wazzar, G. wasser, water; with a formative -r, akin to Iscl. vatn = Sw. vatten = Dan. vand = Goth. watō (pl. watnō), in which a different formative -n appears; cf. OBulg. Russ. voda, Lith. vandū, Gr. ὕδωρ (hōar, hōp), Skt. udan, water; < Teut. wāt, Indo-Eur. wad, be wet. Cf. wash, perhaps from the same root as water. See wet.]

1. A transparent, inodorous, tasteless fluid, H_2O . Water is a powerful refractor of light and an imperfect conductor of heat and electricity; it is very slightly compressible, its absolute diminution for a pressure of one atmosphere being only about one twenty-thousandth of its bulk. Although it is colorless in small quantities, it is blue like the atmosphere when viewed in mass. It assumes a solid form, that of ice or snow, at $32^\circ F.$ ($0^\circ C.$); and it takes the form of vapor or steam at $212^\circ F.$ ($100^\circ C.$), under a pressure of 29.9 inches (more exactly, 760 millimeters) of mercury, retaining that form at all higher temperatures. Under ordinary conditions, therefore, water possesses the liquid form only at temperatures lying between 32° and $212^\circ F.$ The specific gravity of water is 1 at $39^\circ.2 F.$ ($4^\circ C.$), being the unit to which the specific gravities of all solids and liquids are referred: one cubic foot of water at $62^\circ F.$ weighs about 1,000 ounces or 62.25 pounds. Water is 770 times heavier than atmospheric air at $32^\circ F.$ ($0^\circ C.$), and under a pressure of 760 millimeters. It has its greatest density at $39^\circ.2 F.$ ($4^\circ C.$), and in this respect it presents a singular exception to the general law of expansion by heat. If water at $39^\circ.2 F.$ is cooled, it expands as it cools till reduced to 32° , when it solidifies; and if water at $39^\circ.2 F.$ is heated, it expands as the temperature increases in accordance with the general law. Considered from a chemical point of view, water is a compound substance, consisting of hydrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 2 volumes of the former gas to 1 volume of the latter; or by weight it is composed of 2 parts of hydrogen united with 16 parts of oxygen. It exhibits in itself neither acid nor basic properties. Water enters, as a liquid, into a peculiar kind of combination with the greater number of all known substances. Of all liquids water is the most powerful and general solvent, and on this important property its use depends. Without water the processes of animal and vegetable life would come to a stand. The globe is covered on about $\frac{3}{4}$ of its surface by the ocean water, to an average depth of very nearly 12,500 feet. (See ocean.) This water is, however, far from pure, since it holds in solution nearly $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. of its weight of saline matter, about three fourths of which is common salt. The ocean water is not potable, but pure water can be obtained from it by distillation, as is often done at sea—for which purpose, however, fuel and a somewhat cumbersome apparatus are required. Some towns on the South American coast have been supplied with water exclusively in this way, up to the time when works were completed for bringing it from the distant mountains. The chief source of supply for the water which falls upon the earth is the ocean, from whose surface it is raised by the heat of the sun in the form of vapor, ready to be condensed again and fall as rain or snow either on sea or land, in accordance with varying and complicated conditions of climate and topography. The precipitation of rain and snow upon different parts of the earth's surface varies greatly, both in its total amount and in its seasonal distribution. Some regions receive as much as 800 inches in a year; over other extensive areas the rainfall is so small that it is hardly possible to measure it. In some districts the rain is pretty equally distributed through the year; in others it is all, or nearly all, limited to one season, as winter or summer. These climatic conditions are matters of the utmost importance, as regards both the distribution and the welfare of the human race and of animal and vegetable life in general. The habitability and fertility of the earth depend in part on temperature and in part on the amount and character of the precipitation. In general, where there is no rainfall the region is either very sparsely or not at all inhabited, and vegetation is almost entirely wanting; of this character is a considerable part of northern Africa and central Asia: such regions are called deserts. Other regions, where there is some rainfall, but where the amount is small, are destitute of forests but support a more or less abundant growth of grasses. Such regions are, as a rule, thinly inhabited, and the population is pastoral and nomadic; of this character are large areas in central Asia, and in both North and South America. Regions of abundant or even of moderately large precipitation are generally forested, and can be successfully cultivated after the forests have been cut down; these, in general, are the densely inhabited parts of the world. Such are the essential facts and conditions of the distribution of population as connected with rainfall. But to these are many exceptions. Thus, the Nile flows for 2,000 miles through a rainless region, but has a somewhat dense population for a considerable distance along its banks, though only there, the river itself being the sole source of water-supply for the inhabitants of the valley. Some regions of very small rainfall are situated sufficiently near high mountain-ranges on which the precipitation is comparatively large, and from which water can be obtained in considerable quantity with a moderate expenditure of money. In this connection the fact that the precipitation at high altitudes is chiefly in the form of snow is a matter of great importance, as thereby the supply of water is made capable of lasting through, or nearly through, the summer, the snow melting gradually, while the precipitation in the form of rain would be carried away much more rapidly. Rain, if caught at a distance from human habitations and after it has been falling for some time, contains hardly a perceptible trace of foreign matter. Snow falling in the polar regions is also very nearly chemically pure. By distillation, with suitable precautions, water may be obtained which will leave no trace of residue when evaporated in a platinum vessel, and which will also be free from gaseous contents. The water of springs and rivers always contains more or less mineral matter, which it has dissolved out from the soil and rock with which it has been in contact upon the surface or underground. Next to rain-water, the purest natural water is that of mountain-lakes fed from melting snow, and resting on crystalline and impermeable rocks; and rivers in uninhabited regions, running over similar rocks, are also very nearly pure, sometimes leaving not more than two or three grains to the gallon of foreign matter when evaporated to dryness. Rivers, on the other hand, which run over calcareous and soft shaly and clayey rocks always contain a considerable amount of impurities; from fifteen to twenty grains to the gallon is not an uncommon amount under such conditions. Pure water, as that of mountain-lakes and rivers running over crystalline rocks, is called soft; water containing more than eight or ten grains to the gallon of mineral matter is called hard.

The foreign matter in soft water is partly organic and partly mineral; in the latter a little silica is always present, as well as salts of potash, soda, lime, and magnesia. The impurities of hard water are varied in character, but carbonate of lime generally predominates. The mineral impurities of water are not necessarily deleterious to health, even if present in somewhat large quantities. The contamination of water by organic matter (such as sewage, and the like) is a matter of great importance and often of great danger. Dead organic matter is rapidly oxidized by exposure to the air in flowing water, and ceases to be dangerous to health. The living organisms with which water is sometimes contaminated, in receiving the sewage of towns or in other ways, are sometimes the germs of deadly disease, and appear to possess a large amount of vitality, so that they can be conveyed for long distances without becoming disorganized, as is the case with dead organic matter. See water-supply.

Yit signes moo men see Ther water is, as the fertillitee
Of with, reede, aller, yvy, or vyne,
That ther is water nygh is verrey signe.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 174.
As cold waters to a thiraty soul, so is good news from a far country.
Prov. xxv. 25.

Specifically—(a) Rain.

By sudden floods and fall of waters
Buckingham's army is dispersed and scatter'd.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 512.

(b) Mineral-water. See mineral.

Mineral-Waters. . . as the Sulphurous Waters at the Bath.
Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Philosophy and (Physick (v.d. 1702), xvi.

Then houses drumly German water,
To mak' himself look fair and fatter.
Burns, The Two Dogs.

(c) pl. Waves, as of the sea; surges; a flood.

Therefore will not we fear, . . . though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled.
Ps. xvi. 8.

Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea, . . .
And see the Children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
Wordsworth, Ode, Immortality.

2. A limited body of water, as an ocean, a sea, or a lake; often, in provincial English and Scotch use, a river or lake: as, Derwent Water (lake); Gala Water (stream). In law the right or title to a body of water is regarded as an incident to the right to the land which it covers, and the term land includes a body of water thereon.

And many yers be for the passion of Crist, the lay over the same wa'ir a troc, for a foote bryge, wheroff the holy Crosse was aftry wardes made.
Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 27.

Having travelled in this Valley near four hours, we came to a large Water called the Lake.
Maunderell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 3.

The mosses, waters, slaps, and stiles
That lie between us and our home.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

3. Any aqueous or liquid secretion, exudation, humor, etc., of an animal body. (a) Tears.

For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me.
Lam. i. 16.

The water stood in his eyes.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

(b) Sweat; perspiration.
The word water may stand for sudor; a horse is all on a water [in Palsgrave]; . . . we should say, lather.
Oliphant, New English, I. 455.

(c) Saliva; spittle.
For the thought of Peter's oysters brought the water to his mouth.
W. S. Gilbert, Etiquette.

(d) Urine.

Well, I have cast thy water, and I see
Th' art fall'n to wit's extremest poverty,
Sure in consumption of the spritley part.
Marston, Batres, iv. 125.

(e) The aqueous or vitreous humor of the eye; eye-water.

(f) The serous effusion of dropsy, in a blister, and the like: as, water on the brain. (g) pl. In obstet., the liquor amni.

4. A distilled liquor, essence, extract, or the like. See strong water, under strong!

But this water
Hath a strange virtue in't, beyond his art;
It is a sacred relic, part of that Most powerful juice with which Medea made Old Eson young. Massinger, Basheful Lover, v. 1.

His wife afterwards did take me into my closet, and give me a cellar of waters of her own distilling.
Pepys, Diary, April 1, 1668.

5. In phar., a solution of a volatile oil, or of a volatile substance like ammonia or camphor, in water.—6. Transparency, as of water; the property of a precious stone in which its beauty chiefly consists, involving also its refracting power. In this sense the word is applied especially to diamonds, and is used loosely to express their relative excellence: as, a diamond of the first water. Hence used figuratively to note the degree of excellence or fineness of any object of esteem: as, genius of the purest water. See the phrase first water, below.

An excellent lapidary set these stones, sure;
Do you mark their waters?
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 2.

7. The waterside; the shore of a sea, lake, stream, or the like, considered with or apart from its inhabitants; specifically, a watering-place; a seaside resort. [Provincial].

Gar warn the water, braid and wide.
Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 110).

The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the country. To raise the water, therefore, was to alarm those who lived along its side.
Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 110, note.

The phrase "going to the waters" has been familiar to me for the last forty years as used by the peasantry in the counties of Huntingdon, Rutland, and Lincoln. By it is meant a seaside place, and not an inland watering-place, such as Malvern, Bath, Leamington, or Cheltenham.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 878.

8. In finance, additional shares created by watering stock. See water, v. t., 4.

By the much-abused word "property" he referred, of course, to the fictitious capital, or "water," which the gas companies had added to their real capital.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 92.

Above water, afloat; hence, figuratively, out of embarrassment or trouble.

Being ask'd by some that were not ignorant in Sea Affairs how long he thought the Ship might be kept above Water, he said he could promise nothing, but that it could not be done above three Hours.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 277.

Aërated waters. See aërate.—Aix-la-Chapelle water, a mineral water obtained from various thermal springs at Aix-la-Chapelle in Rhenish Prussia, containing a large proportion of common salt, also other sodium salts and sulphur.—Aix-les-Bains water, from thermal springs of the same name in Savoy, contains chiefly sulphates and carbonates of sodium, magnesium, and calcium in small proportion, employed in the form of systematic bathing in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, skin-diseases, etc.—Alien water. See alien.—Apollinaris water, an agreeable sparkling water from Rhenish Prussia, containing a very minute proportion of mineral ingredients, used as a table-water.—Bag of waters, in obstet., the bulging fetal membranes, filled with liquor amni, which act as a hydraulic wedge to dilate the mouth of the womb.—Ballston Spa waters, from Ballston, New York, effervescent waters, containing a large amount of common salt with carbonate of calcium and magnesium. They possess tonic and cathartic properties.—Baryta-water. See baryta.—Basic water. See basic.

—Benediction of the waters, in the Gr. Ch., the solemn public ceremony of blessing the water in the phials, the running waters, and the sea, observed annually with a procession and other rites on the feast of the Epiphany. See holy water, below.—Bethesda water, from Waukesha, Wisconsin, an effervescent water, containing but a small proportion of mineral ingredients: used chiefly in the treatment of urinary disorders and as a table-water.—Between wind and water. See wind!—Bitter water, a purgative mineral water having a bitter taste owing to the presence of a large amount of sulphate of magnesium, or Epsom salts. Friedrichshall water is an example of a bitter water.—Black water. Same as pyrosis.—Blue Lick water, a strong sulphur water, containing also a large amount of salt, obtained from the Blue Lick Springs, Kentucky. It possesses cathartic properties, and is used largely in the treatment of catarrhal troubles of the respiratory, digestive, and urinary tracts.—Broken water. See broken.—Buffalo lithia water, an alkaline sulphur water, containing some lithia, from Mecklenburg county, Virginia. It is diuretic and slightly laxative, and is employed in the treatment of lithemia, Bright's disease, and certain forms of dyspepsia.—Burning water, alcohol. Compare fire-water.

Take the beste wlyn that ge may fynde. . . But riste ge muste distille this wlyn 7. tymes, and thanne haue ge good brenyngne watin.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 4.
Canterbury water, water tintured with the blood of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in 1170, and afterward canonized as a saint and martyr. See the quotation.

To satisfy these cravings, so as to hinder an uneasy feeling at the thought of tasting human blood, a tiny drop was mingled with a chalice-full of water, and in this manner given to those who begged a sip. This was the famous "Canterbury-water." Never had such a thing as drinking a martyr's blood been done before; never has it been done since. Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. i. 424.

Carbonated water, water charged with carbonic-acid gas: either natural spring-water like seltzer and apollinaris, or distilled water artificially charged with the gas.—Carlsbad water, an alkaline sulphated water, heavily charged with carbonic acid, from various thermal springs in Carlsbad, Bohemia: employed extensively in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, urinary disorders, chronic diseases of the eye and ear, intestinal catarrh, and chronic constipation.—Chow-chow water. See chow-chow.—Clysmic water, an agreeable sparkling table-water, containing chiefly calcium bicarbonate, from Waukesha, Wisconsin. It is used also as a diuretic in bladder troubles.—Cologne water. Same as cologne.—Crab Orchard water, a cathartic water, containing a rather large proportion of magnesium sulphate and a smaller amount of some other sulphates and carbonates, obtained from springs of the same name in Kentucky.—Deep water or waters, water too deep for comfort or safety; hence, figuratively, embarrassment, trial, or distress.

Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.
Ps. lxxix. 14.

Once he had been very nearly in deep water because Mrs. Froudie had taken it in dudgeon that a certain young rector, who had been left a widower, had a very pretty governess for his children.
Trollope.

False waters, in obstet., a fluid which occasionally collects between the amnion and the chorion.—First water, the highest degree of fineness in a diamond or other precious stone; hence, figuratively, the highest rank morally, socially, or otherwise. The expression first water, when applied to a diamond, denotes that it is free from all traces of color, blemish, flaw, or other imperfection, and that its brilliancy is perfect. Often used attributively.

One comfort, folk are beginning to take an interest in us. I see nob of the first water looking with a fatherly eye into our affairs. C. Reade. (Diagon.)

Frans-Josef water, a bitter water, containing a small proportion of iron, obtained at Fured, Hungary. It is used as a cathartic, and also in the treatment of chronic rheumatism and catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and alimentary tracts. — Friedrichshall water, a "bitter water" from the village of this name in Germany. It is strongly aperient, containing a large proportion of sulphates and chloride of magnesium and sodium. It is used as a cathartic and also in diseases of the heart and kidneys and in chronic bronchitis. — Frightened water. See frighten. — Giesenhübler water, an agreeable sparkling alkaline water from Giesenhübler-Fuchstein, near Carlsbad in Bohemia; used as a table-water, and also in cases of uric acid diseases and of dyspeptic and other troubles referred thereto. — Goulard water, an aqueous solution containing about 25 per cent. of lead subacetate; the liquor plumbi used in the United States Pharmacopoeia, used as a solution in inflammation. — Ground water, surface moisture, or the water retained by the porous surface-soil. Ground water flows in accordance with the common law of hydrostatics, but its motion is impeded by friction. Compare ground air, under air. — Hard water. See def. 1. — Harrogate waters, chalybeate and sulphur waters from the watering-place of this name in Yorkshire, England. They are aperient, and are used chiefly in the treatment of skin-diseases and of morbid conditions of the intestinal canal. — High water, the greatest elevation of the water at flood-tide; also, the time when such highest point in the flow is reached.

Gaffer was away in his boat; . . . he was not, according to his usual habits at night, to be counted on before next high water. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, l. 13.

High-water mark, the mark or limit of water at high tide; hence, figuratively, the highest limit attained or attainable; as, the high-water mark of prosperity. Sometimes erroneously written high water-mark.

His [Wordsworth's] "Ode on Immortality" is the high-water mark which the intellect has reached in this age. Emerson, English Traits.

High-water shrub, a shrubby composite plant, Iva frutescens, a native of the United States along the sea-coast from Massachusetts to Texas. Also called marsh-elder. — Holy water, water used for ritual purification of persons and things; especially, water blessed by a Christian priest, and used to sprinkle upon persons or things, or to sign one's self with at entering church. Holy or lustral water has been used in almost all religions in purification of persons and things, especially in preparation for worship, and also to drive away the powers of evil. Under the ancient Jewish law, the priests bathed their hands and feet in a laver before entering the tabernacle or approaching the altar (Ex. xxx. 17-21, xl. 30-32), and the "water of purification" (Num. xix. 7, xix. 9, etc.) presents another analogy to Christian usage. The use of holy water in the Christian church is very ancient. In the Roman Catholic Church holy water is prepared every Sunday by exorcism and benediction of salt, and exorcism and benediction of the water, after which the salt is cast in the water, and both again blessed together. In the Greek Church the use of a holy-water stoup (columbin) at the entrance of a church is almost obsolete. Holy water is used in the houses, and is blessed on the first of the month in the phiale, and at the Epiphany there is a general blessing of water. See cut under stoup, 3. — Holy-water clerk, sprinkler, stick. See holy. — Homburg water, a chalybeate saline water from springs in Homburg near the Rhine; used in the treatment of dyspepsia and disorders of the liver, especially those that have been brought on by high living. — Hot Springs waters, calcic sulphur waters from a number of thermal springs in Hot Springs, Arkansas. They are largely employed in the treatment of syphilis, rheumatism, and chronic diseases of the skin and mucous membranes. — House of water. See house. — Hungary water, a preparation of spirits of rosemary, used, especially during the eighteenth century, as a lotion, a perfume, or an internal remedy. The name is said to have been given to it in allusion to a queen of Hungary who tested the efficacy of the water in bathing.

All these ingredients mention'd are to be had at the Apothecaries, except the Queen of Hungaries Water, which is sold by Mich. Johnson, Bookseller in Leichfield. The Happy Sinner (1691), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., [X. 115.]

Hunyadi János water, a cathartic water, containing a large percentage of sodium and magnesium sulphates, obtained from Budapest in Hungary. — Interdiction of fire and water. See interdiction. — Jack in the water. See jack. — Javelle's water. See eau de Javelle, under eau. — Kissingen water, a mildly laxative water obtained from several springs in the town of this name in Bavaria. It is used in affections of the liver and alimentary canal, chronic bronchitis, and other catarrhal conditions. — La Bourboule water, an arsenical water from La Bourboule, in Puy-de-Dôme, France. It is used in the treatment of various skin-diseases and in chronic malarial troubles. — Lebanon Springs water, a mineral water, containing chiefly carbonates and sulphates, obtained from Lebanon Springs, New York. It is used principally in the treatment of diseases of the digestive and urinary tracts. — Like water, with the ready or abundant flow of water; hence, overflowing; abundantly; freely; as, to spend money like water.

They came round about me daily like water; they compassed me about together. Ps. lxxxviii. 17.

Look of water. See look. — Low water, low tide.

Set not her Tongue

A going agen;
Sh' as made more Noise than half a dozen Paper-mills;
London-Bridge at a low Water is Silence to her. Bithergs, Love in a Tub, l. 2.

Low-water alarm. See alarm. — Low-water indicator. See indicator. — Low-water mark, the mark or limit of water at low tide; in a figurative sense, the lowest or a very low point or degree. Sometimes erroneously written low water-mark.

I'm at low water-mark myself — only one bob and a magpie; but, as far as it goes, I'll fork out and stump. Dickens, Oliver Twist.

Low-water slack, the time of slack water at the lowest stage of the tide, when the ebb has done and the flood has not yet made. — Marionbad water, a mineral water from the spa of this name in Bohemia, not far from Carlsbad. The water is used largely in gout, hemorrhoids, obesity, and liver troubles occurring as a result of high living, and also for chronic bronchitis, neuralgia, and cystitis. — Me-teoric waters, mineral waters, north water. See the adjectives. — Oil on troubled waters, figuratively, anything done or used to mollify, assuage, or allay: from the smoothing effect of the pouring of oil upon breaking waves, a common resource of modern seamen. The efficacy of oil for such use was known to the ancient Greeks and Romans (see "Notes and Queries," 6th ser. III. 252) and the literal practice no doubt preceded the figurative saying. — Orange-flower water. Same as orange-water. — Oxy-genated water. See oxygenate. — Peracetic-water. See peracetic. — Pilot's water. See pilot. — Poland Spring water, a water, very weak in mineral constituents, obtained from South Poland, Maine. It is employed chiefly as a table-water and as a diuretic in the treatment of chronic disorders of the urinary tract. — Potash-water. See potash. — Public, quick, quicksilver water. See the qualifying words. — Red water, bloody urine; hematuria. — Richfield Springs water, a sulphur water from the village of the same name in New York State, used largely in the treatment of rheumatism, skin-diseases, and chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract. — Rockbridge Alum Springs water, a tonic water, with astringent taste, obtained in the place of the same name in Virginia. It is employed in the treatment of skin-diseases and catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary tracts. — Rosemary water. Same as Hungary water. — Rubinal-Condal water, an aperient water, containing chiefly sodium sulphate, obtained from a spring in the Spanish Pyrenees. — Saratoga waters, various mineral waters, some possessing tonic and others cathartic properties, obtained from Saratoga Springs, New York. They are used in the treatment of certain chronic skin-diseases, constipation, indigestion, and liver disorders, and in catarrhal conditions of the urinary and digestive tracts. Among the best-known of the springs are the Congress, Hathorn, High Rock, Geyser, Pavillon, Seltzer, and Vichy. — Sedative water. See sedative. — Selters water, a highly prized medicinal mineral water found at Nieder-Selters, a village in the province of Hesse-Nassau in Prussia. It contains a considerable quantity of sodium chloride (common salt), and much smaller quantities of sodium, calcium, and magnesium carbonates. Also called Seltzer water. — Sharon Springs water, a sulphur water from Sharon Springs, New York. It is largely used in the treatment of diseases of the skin, chronic catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and digestive tract, gout, and rheumatism. — Silicious, slack, strong water. See the adjectives. — Soden water, saline chalybeate water from Soden in Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used chiefly in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract and in the early stages of pulmonary consumption. — Soft water. See def. 1. — Sweet water. (a) Fresh as opposed to salt water. See sweet, a. 8. (b) Glycerin. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 810. — Thermal waters, hot springs. — To be in hot water. See hot. — To break water. (a) To appear upon the surface of the water to blow, as a whale making its rising. (b) To float to the surface, as any sunken object. — To cast oil on troubled waters. See oil on troubled waters, above. — To cast (a person's) water. See cast. — To cast water into the Thames, to perform unnecessary or useless labor (possibly involving a play on the word Thames, suggesting temes, a slave).

It is to give him (quoth I) as much almes or neede As cast water in Tem, or as good a deede As it is to helpe a dogge over a stile. J. Heywood, Proverbs (ed. Sharman), p. 69.

To hold water. See hold. — To make foul water. See foul. — To make water. See make. — To pour water on the hands. See hand. — To take water. (a) To allow one's boat to fall into the wake of another boat, as in a race. Hence (b) To weaken in a contest; back out or back down. [Slang.] — To throw cold water on. See cold. — To tread water. See tread. — Troubled waters, a commotion; trouble; discord. See oil on troubled waters, above. — Under water, below the surface of the water. — Vals water, sparkling alkaline water from Vals in southern France. It is used in dyspepsia, urinary disorders, affections of the liver, obesity, gout, and diseases of the skin. — Vichy water. (a) An alkaline water, containing minute quantities of iron and arsenic, obtained from numerous thermal springs in Vichy, France, and also artificially prepared. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the intestinal and urinary tracts, gall-stones, lithemia, gout, and rheumatism. (b) A water of somewhat similar composition from the Vichy Spring in Saratoga. See Saratoga waters. — Water bewitched, water slightly flavored, as with liquor; any weak or greatly diluted decoction; figuratively, an insipid, tasteless compound.

Indeed, madam, your ladyship is very sparing of your tea; I protest, the last I took was no more than water bewitched. Swift, Polite Conversation, l.

Water-check valve, in a steam-engine, an automatic valve which regulates the water-supply delivered by the feed-water pipe to the boiler. See check-valve. — Water cider. See cider. — Water damaged. Same as water bewitched. Halliwell. — Water in one's shoes, a source of discomfort or irritation to one.

They caressed his lordship very much as a new comer, whom they were glad of the honour to meet, and talked about a time to dine with him; all which (as they say) was water in his shoes. Roger North, Lord Guilford, l. 295. (Devies.)

Water-of-Ayr stone. See Ayr stone, under stone. — Water of Cotunninus, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear; the perilymph, technically called liquor Cotunnini. — Water of crystallization. See crystallization. — Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water to be drunk as directed in Num. v. 11-31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt. — Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation.

I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. Rev. xxi. 6.

(b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor: a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare aqua vita.

The shepherds . . . were collected together (not without a quenoh of the mountain-dew, or water of life) in a large shed. J. Wilson, Light and Shadows of Scottish Life, p. 305.

Water of purification. See holy water. — Water of separation (literally, 'water of uncleanness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer burned with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet, used to sprinkle upon unclean persons (Num. xix.). — Water on the brain. See brain. — Water-steam thermometer. See thermometer. — Water venom-globulin, a poisonous principle extracted from serpent-venom. — White Sulphur Springs water, a strong sulphur water from the springs of the same name in Greenbrier county, West Virginia. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary systems, constipation, and various skin-diseases. — White water. (a) Shoal water near the shore; breakers. (b) The foaming water in rapids or swiftly flowing shallows.

The continuous white water of the upper rapids raging round the curve of a steep red bank. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 681.

(c) Foam churned up by a whale. — Wiesbaden water, a saline water obtained from numerous thermal springs in Wiesbaden, Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used in the treatment of skin-diseases, gout, rheumatism, and neuralgia. — Wildungen water, a mineral water, containing carbonates of calcium and magnesium and a small percentage of sulphates, from Nieder-Wildungen in Waldeck. It is employed chiefly in the treatment of diseases of the urinary tract. — Yellow Sulphur Springs water, a mineral water from springs of the same name in Virginia. It contains a large proportion of lime salts and sulphates, and is cathartic. (See also barley-water, fire-water, lead-water, rice-water.)

water (wâ'tôr), v. [ME. wateren, weteren, wâren, wâren, wâren, wâren, wâren, AS. wâtrian, water, = D. wateren, water, make water, = MHG. wezzern, G. wässern, irrigate, water (cf. Ice. vatna = Sw. vatna = Dan. vande, water); from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To put water into or upon; moisten, dilute, sprinkle, or soak with water; specifically, to irrigate.

All the grounds throughout the land of Egypt is continually watered by the water which upon ye 25 day of August is turned into the canals round about. E. Webb, Travels (ed. Arber), p. 22.

Set fruit-trees round, nor e'er indulge thy sloth,
But water them, and urge their shady growth. Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To supply with water for drinking; feed with water: said of animals.

Aft times has I water'd my steed Wt the water o' Wearie's well. The Water o' Wearie's Well (Child's Ballads, l. 199).

If the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed though they do not use it for ten years. Blackstone, Com., l. Int., iii.

3. To produce by moistening and pressure upon (silk, or other fabric) a sort of pattern on which there is a changeable play of light. See watered silk, under watered.

These things [silk and cotton goods] are watered, which very much adds to their beauty; they are made also at Aleppo, but not in so great perfection. Pococke, Description of the East, II. l. 125.

4. To increase (the nominal capital of a corporation) by the issue of new shares without a corresponding increase of actual capital. Justification for such a transaction is usually sought by claiming that the property and franchises have increased in value, so that an increase of stock is necessary in order fairly to represent existing capital. [Commercial slang.]

The stock of some of the railways has been watered to an alarming extent by the issue of fictitious capital, existing only on paper, though ranking equally for dividend — when money for this is forthcoming. Usually, the paper stock has been sold to unwary purchasers. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 857.

To water one's plants, to shed tears. [Old slang.]

Neither water thou thy plants, in that thou departest from thy plagues nie, neither stand in a manning where ther it bee best to depart or not. Euphues to Philautus, M. 4. (Nares.)

II. intrans. 1. To give out, emit, discharge, or secrete water.

If they suffer the dusts of bribes to be thrown into their sight, their eyes will water and twinkle, and fall at last to blind connivance. Rev. T. Adams, Works, l. 147.

His eyes would have watered with a true feeling over the sale of a widow's furniture.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 12.

2. To gather saliva as a symptom of appetite: said of the mouth or teeth, and in figurative use noting vehement desire or craving.

In their minds they conceived a hope of a dainty banquet, and, spying their enemies a farre of, began to swallow their spittle as their mouths watered for greediness of their prey.

Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. [Arber, p. 181].

Oh, my little green gooseberry, my teeth waters at ye! Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, v. 1.

The dog's mouth waters only at the sight of food, but the gourmand's mouth will also water at the thought of it. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 87.

3. To get or take in water: as, the ship put into port to water; specifically, to drink water.

We watered at the Canaries, we traded with the Salvages at Dominica. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 150.

Were I a poet, by Hippocrene I swear (which was a certain well where all the Muses watered), etc. Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, II. 1.

A Mischance befel the Horse, which lamed him as he went a watering to the Seine. Howell, Letters, I. 1. 17.

water-adder (wá'tér-ad'ér), n. An aquatic serpent like, or mistaken for, an adder. (a) The water-moccasin, a venomous snake. See moccasin (with out). [U. S.] (b) The commonest water-snake of the United States, Tropidonotus (often Nerodia) spedon. This is a large, stout serpent, roughened with keeled scales, and somewhat spotted or blotched, like an adder, especially when young. It bites quite hard in self-defense when attacked, but is not poisonous. [U. S.]

waterage (wá'tér-áj), n. [water + -age.] Money paid for transportation by water.

water-agrimony (wá'tér-ag'ri-mō-ni), n. An old name of the bur-marigold, Bidens tripartita or B. cernua.

water-aloe (wá'tér-al'ō), n. Same as water-soldier.

water-analysis (wá'tér-a-nal'i-sis), n. In chem., the analysis of waters, either to determine their potable quality, or fitness for use in boilers or otherwise in the arts.

water-anchor (wá'tér-ang'kgr), n. A sail distended by spars and thrown overboard to hold a vessel's head to the wind and retard her drifting; a drag-anchor. Also called sea-anchor.

water-antelope (wá'tér-an'tē-lōp), n. One of numerous different African antelopes, as of the genera Eleotragus, Kobus, and some others, which frequent marshy or reedy places; a reed-buck; a water-buck. See cuts under nagor and sing-sing.

water-apple (wá'tér-ap'l), n. The custard-apple, Anona reticulata.

water-arum (wá'tér-ā'rum), n. See Calla, 1.

water-ash (wá'tér-ash), n. 1. A small tree, Fraxinus platycarpa, without special value, found in deep river-swamps from Virginia to Texas and in the West Indies.—2. The black hoop- or ground-ash, Fraxinus sambucifolia, of wet grounds in the eastern half of North America. Its tough pliable dark-brown wood is largely used for interior finish and cabinet-work, for making hoops and baskets, etc.

water-avens (wá'tér-av'enz), n. A plant, Geum rivale, found in wet meadows northward in both hemispheres. It grows some 2 feet high, and is noticeable for its nodding flowers (large for the genus), with purplish-orange petals, and, in fruit, for its feathery styles and persistent purple calyx. Also purple avens.

water-back (wá'tér-bak), n. 1. An iron chamber or reservoir or a combination of pipes, at the back of a cooking-range or other fireplace, to utilize the heat of the fire in providing a supply of hot water.—2. In brewing, a cistern which holds the water used for mashing.

water-bag (wá'tér-bag), n. 1. The reticulum of the stomach of the camel and other Camelidae, corresponding to the honeycomb tripe of ordinary ruminants.—2. In her., a bearing representing a vessel for holding water, usually drawn as if a leather bucket. It differs from water-bouget, or bouget, in retaining the form of the actual vessel.

water-bailage (wá'tér-bā'lāj), n. Bailage upon goods transported by water. See bailage. Water-baylage, a tax demanded upon all goods by the City, imported and exported. Pepys, Diary, Jan. 20, 1668-9. (Davies.)

water-bailiff (wá'tér-bā'lif), n. 1. A custom-house officer in a port town whose duty is to search ships.

Out of patience with the whole tribe of custom-house extortioners, boatmen, tide-waiters, and water-bailiffs, that beset me on all sides, worse than a swarm of musquitoes, I proceeded a little too roughly to brush them away with my rattan. Cumberland, West Indian, I. 5.

2. A former officer of the London corporation who saw to the observance of the statutes and by-laws applicable to the river Thames.—3. See water-bailiff, under bailiff.

water-balance (wá'tér-bal'ans), n. An old form of water-raising apparatus, consisting of a series of troughs one above another, supported in a hanging frame, and oscillating like a pendulum. As the frame swings, the water dipped by the lowest trough runs into that next above, and in the return motion it is emptied in turn from that into the next above again, and so on. E. H. Knight.

water-bar (wá'tér-bār), n. A ridge crossing a hill or mountain road, and leading aside water flowing down the road.

They . . . were descending, with careful reining in and bearing back, the steep, long plunges . . . for these mountain roads are like cataract beds, and travellers are like the falling water—where the only break and safety were the water-bars, humping up across the way at frequent intervals. Mrs. Whitney, Odd or Even? xiii.

water-barometer (wá'tér-ba-rom'e-tér), n. A barometer in which water is substituted for mercury. See barometer.

If a long pipe, closed at one end only, were emptied of air, filled with water, the open end kept in water, and the pipe held upright, the water would rise in it nearly twenty-eight feet. In this way water barometers have been made. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 12.

water-barrel (wá'tér-bar'el), n. 1. A water-cask.—2. In mining, a large wrought-iron barrel with a self-acting valve in the bottom, used in drawing water where there are no pumps. [South Staffordshire, Eng.]

water-barrow (wá'tér-bar'ō), n. A two-wheeled barrow carrying a tank, often swung on trunnions, used by gardeners and others; a water-barrel. E. H. Knight.

water-basil (wá'tér-baz'il), n. In gem-cutting, a uniform bevel cut around the top of a stone, after the grinding of the upper flat table.

water-bath (wá'tér-bath), n. 1. A bath composed of water, in contradistinction to a vapor-bath.—2. In chem., a vessel containing water which is heated to a certain temperature, over which chemical preparations or solutions are placed in suitable vessels to be digested, evaporated, or dried at the given temperature.—3. Same as bain-marie.

Water-baths of various forms (A, B, C), with adjustable rings (a, b, c), to receive vessels of different sizes. B and C are arranged to have a constant water-supply.

water-battery (wá'tér-bat'er-i), n. 1. In elect. See battery.—2. In fort., a battery nearly on a level with the water.

water-beadle (wá'tér-bē'dl), n. A water-bailiff (?).

In the year 1700 one S. Smith, who is described as water-beadle, of St. Mary Magdalen, Bermoudsey, left a legacy to his nephew, Matthew Smith, of this parish. N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 487.

water-bean (wá'tér-bēn), n. A plant of the genus Nelumbo.

water-bear (wá'tér-bār), n. A bear-animalcule. See Macrobiotidae, Arcticea, and Tardigrada.

water-bearer (wá'tér-bār'er), n. [MF. watry berare = Sw. vattenbärare = Dan. vandbarer; < water + bearer.] 1. One who carries water; specifically, one whose business is the conveying of water from a spring, well, river, etc., to purchasers or consumers.

If there be never a wysé man, make a water-bearer, a tinker, a cobbler, . . . compotroller of the mynte. Latimer, Sermon on the Plough.

2. [cap.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac. See Aquarius.

water-bearing (wá'tér-bār'ing), n. A journal-box having in the lower part a groove communicating with a pipe through which water under heavy pressure is admitted beneath the journal, which it raises slightly from its bearings. As the journal revolves, the water flows in an exceedingly thin film or sheet between it and the bearings, forming a very efficient lubricant. See cut in next column. Also called paier-pluuant and hydraulic pilot.

water-bed (wá'tér-bed), n. A large india-rubber mattress filled with water, on which a very sick person, or one who is bedridden, is sometimes placed, to avoid the production of bed-sores. Also called hydrostatic bed.

water-beech (wá'tér-bēch), n. 1. A small tree, the American hornbeam, Carpinus Caroliniana: so named from its growing in wet ground, and a, wheel; b, b', bearings for the shaft; c, c', hollow supports for bearings; d, d', pipe and branches through which water is forced into the hollow supports e, e', slot through which the water passes into the bearings with sufficient force to support completely the weight of a and the shaft.

from its resemblance, especially in its bark, to the beech. Also called blue-beech.—2. Improperly, the sycamore, or American plane-tree, Platanus occidentalis, growing on low grounds, and having reddish wood like that of the beech.

water-beetle (wá'tér-bē'tl), n. A beetle which lives in the water. Such beetles belong mainly to the families Amphibiidae, Haliplidae, Dytiscidae, and Gyrinidae of the adephagous series, and the Hydrophilidae of the clavicorn series. The first four are sometimes grouped under the name Hydradeephaga, as distinguished from the Gradephaga, or ground-beetles and tiger-beetles. A few other beetles are to some extent aquatic; but the term is restricted to the species of the five families named. See these family names, and cuts under Dytiscus, Gyrinidae, Hydrobius, Hydrophilidae, and Ilybius. Compare water-bug.

water-bellows (wá'tér-bel'ōz), n. A form of blower used in gas-machines, and formerly to supply a blast for furnaces. It consists essentially of an inverted vessel suspended in water, on raising which in the water air is drawn in through an inlet valve, while on lowering the vessel the air is forced out again through another valve. Such vessels are usually placed in pairs, and are lowered and raised alternately. The device is also used for supplying air to the pipes of a pneumatic clock-system. The central clock lifts the inverted tank, and, letting it fall once a minute, sends a puff of air through the pipes, and thus moves all the hands of the clocks connected with the system.

water-bells (wá'tér-belz), n. The European white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphaea alba). Britten and Holland. [North. Eng.]

water-bird (wá'tér-bérd), n. In ornith., an aquatic as distinguished from a terrestrial or aerial bird; in the plural, the gallatorial and nutatorial or wading and swimming birds, collectively distinguished from land-birds. The term reflects an obsolete classification in which birds were divided into three main groups, called Aves aérae, Aves terrestres, and Aves aquaticae. These divisions are abolished, but the English names of two of them, land-bird and water-bird, continue in current use because of their convenience. Compare water-fowl, 2.

water-biscuit (wá'tér-bis'kit), n. A biscuit or cracker made of flour and water.

water-blackbird (wá'tér-blak'bérd), n. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. See Cinclus and dipper, 5. [Ireland and Scotland.]

water-blast (wá'tér-blást), n. In mining, a method of ventilation, in which an apparatus is employed which is the same in principle as the trompe of the Catalan forge. See trompe, 2.

It [the water-blast] is not much employed nowadays, and gives only a low useful effect.

Callon, Lectures on Mining (trans.), II. 441.

water-blebs (wá'tér-blebz), n. Pemphigus.

water-blink (wá'tér-blingk), n. A spot of cloud hanging in arctic regions over open water, the presence of which it serves to indicate.

The water-blink consists of dark clouds or spots on the horizon, and is formed by the ascending mists which gather in clouds and hang over pools of water. It is always the herald of advance, and is eagerly looked for. Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 160.

water-blinks (wá'tér-blingks), n. Same as blinking-chickweed.

water-blob (wá'tér-blob), n. A local name of the marsh-marigold, Calltha palustris, of the white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphaea alba), and of the yellow water-lily, Nymphaea (Nuphar) lutea. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-blue (wá'tér-blō), n. A coal-tar color used in dyeing, and similar to soluble blue. It is principally used for dyeing cotton.

water-board (wá'tér-bōrd), n. A board set up on the edge of a boat to keep off spray, etc.

water-boat (wá'tér-bōt), n. A boat carrying water in bulk for the supply of ships.

water-boatman (wá'tér-bōt'man), n. 1. The boat-fly or boat-insect, an aquatic bug of the family Notonectidae: so called because these insects move in the water like a boat propelled by oars. They are more fully called back-swimming water-boatmen, and also back-swimmers, because they row themselves about on their backs with their long feathered oar-like legs. Some species are very common in ponds and brooks in the United States, and are often put in aquariums to exhibit their silvery colors and curious actions. N. undulata is a characteristic example.

2. An aquatic bug of the family Corixidae. All the North American species belong to the genus Corixa, as C. undulata.

water-borne (wá'tér-börn), a. Borne or conveyed by water; carried in a boat or vessel; floated.

Thus merchandise might be waterborne from the channel to the Mediterranean.

Motley, Hist. Netherlands, IV. 147.

The stone of which it [bridge from the Strand to the opposite shore of the Thames] was constructed, being water-borne, had to pay this tax.

S. Dowell, Taxes in England, IV. 394.

Water-borne goods, goods carried on shipboard.

water-bottle (wá'tér-bot'l), n. A bottle made of glass, skin, rubber, or other material, and designed for holding water.

water-bouquet (wá'tér-bó'jet), n. In her., same as bouquet, 2.

water-bound (wá'tér-bound), a. Impeded, hindered, or hemmed in by water, as in case of a flood, heavy rains, etc.

While water bound, it [a foraging party] was attacked by guerrillas. New York Tribune, April 30, 1862.

water-box (wá'tér-boks), n. A bottom or side of a furnace consisting of a compartment of iron kept filled with water. It serves to prevent the burning out of the iron.

water-brain (wá'tér-brán), n. Gid or staggers of sheep, caused by the brain-worm.

water-brain fever. Meningitis; acute hydrocephalus.

water-brash (wá'tér-brash), n. Same as pyrosis.

water-braxy (wá'tér-brak'si), n. A disease of sheep in which there is hemorrhage into the peritoneal cavity. See braxy.

water-break (wá'tér-brák), n. A wavelet or ripple. [Rare.]

Many a silvery water-break
Above the golden gravel.

Tennyson, The Brook.

water-breather (wá'tér-bré'thér), n. Any branchiate which breathes water by means of gills.

water-bridge (wá'tér-brij), n. A fire-bridge which also forms part of the water-space of a boiler. If dependent from the boiler, it is called a hanging bridge; if it has flue-space above and below, it is a midfeather. Also called water-table.

water-brose (wá'tér-bröz), n. Brose made of meal and water only. [Scotch.]

I'll sit down o'er my scanty meal,
Be't water brose or muslin-kail, Wi' cheerfu' face. Burns, To James Smith.

water-buck (wá'tér-buk), n. A water-antelope, especially a kob, as Kobus ellipsiprymnus, which abounds in some African lowlands, as in Nyassa-land. Another water-buck is Cervicapra redunca. See kob, and cuts under singing and nagor.

Among the ruminants is the dangerous buffalo (Bubalus caffer), the never-to-be-sufficiently-admired giraffe, . . . thegnu, the pallah, the water-buck (Cobus). Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 472.

water-buckler (wá'tér-buk'lér), n. Same as water-shield.

water-budget (wá'tér-buj'et), n. In her., same as bouquet, 2. Also called dossier.

water-buffalo (wá'tér-buf'g-ló), n. See water-cow.

water-bug (wá'tér-bug), n. 1. Any true bug of the heteropterous section Hydrocorisæ or Cryptocerata, including those which live beneath the surface of the water, and belong to the families Corixidae, Notonectidae, Nepidae, Belostomatidae, and Naucoriidae. See these words, and cuts under Belostoma and Ranatra.—2. Any one of certain true bugs of the heteropterous section Aurocorisæ, including those which live mainly on the surface of the water, and which belong to the families Hydrobatidae, Veliidae, Limnobatidae, Salidae, and Hydrometridæ. See these words.—3. The croton-bug or German cockroach, Blatta (Phyllodromia) germanica: so called from its preference for water-pipes and moist places in houses. See cuts under croton-bug and Blattidae.—Giant water-bug, any member of the Belostomatidae.

water-butt (wá'tér-but), n. 1. A large open-headed cask, usually set up on end in an out-house or close to a dwelling, serving as a reservoir for rain- or pipe-water.—2. A water-beetle, as Dytiscus marginatus and related species.

water-cabbage (wá'tér-kab'áj), n. The American white water-lily, Castalia (Nymphaea) odorata.

water-calamin (wá'tér-kal'á-mint), n. The corn-mint, Mentha arvensis.

water-caltrop (wá'tér-kal'trop), n. 1. The water-nut, Trapa.—2. A book-name of the pondweeds Potamogeton densus and P. crispus.

water-can (wá'tér-kan), n. The yellow water-lily, Nymphaea (Nuphar) lutea, or the European white water-lily, Castalia speciosa (Nymphaea alba): so named from the shape of the seed-vesSEL. [Prov. Eng.]

water-cancer, water-canker (wá'tér-kan'sér, -kang'kér), n. Gangrenous stomatitis, or noma. See noma.

water-cap (wá'tér-kap), n. 1. A form of cylindrical diaphragm of copper in the time-fuse of a shell, intended to prevent the fuse from being extinguished by water in ricochet firing.—2. A bird of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, the species and genera of which are numerous. Also water-chat. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-carpet (wá'tér-kár'pet), n. 1. A British geometrid moth, Cidaria suffumata.—2. An American golden-saxifrage, Chrysosplenium Americanum, which spreads on the surface of springs and streams. Wood, Class-book of Bot.

water-carriage (wá'tér-kar'áj), n. 1. Transportation or conveyance by water.

In the important matter of water-carriage the farmer in the Canadian Far West has unrivalled advantages. W. F. Rae, Newfoundland to Manitoba, xlii.

2. The conducting or conveying of water from place to place.

In the water-carriage system each house has its own network of drain-pipes, soil-pipes, and waste-pipes, which lead from the basins, sinks, closets, and gullies within and about the house to the common sewer. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 714.

3. Means of conveyance by water, collectively; vessels; boats. [Rare.]

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in boats made of earthenware. Arbuthnot.

water-carrier (wá'tér-kar'i-ér), n. One who or that which carries water; specifically, an arrangement of wires or the like on which a bucket of water, raised from a well, etc., may be conveyed wherever required, as to a house.—Water-carriers' paralysis, paralysis of the musculo-spiral nerve.

water-cart (wá'tér-kárt), n. A cart carrying water for sale or for watering streets, gardens, etc. For the latter purpose the cart bears a large cask or tank containing water, which, by means of a tube or tubes perforated with holes, is sprinkled on roads and streets to prevent dust from rising, or in gardens to water plants.

water-cask (wá'tér-kásk), n. A strong light cask used for transporting drinking-water, especially on sea-going ships. Compare water-tank and breaker.

water-caster (wá'tér-kás'tér), n. A physician who professed to discover the diseases of his patients by "casting" or examining their urine; commonly, a quack.

Wastes much in phisicke and her water-caster. John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

water-cat (wá'tér-kat), n. The nair, or Oriental otter, Lutra nair, translating a Mahratta name.

Water-bug (Limnobates lineatus), about three times natural size.

water-cavy (wá'tér-ká'vi), n. The capibara. water-celery (wá'tér-sel'g-ri), n. 1. The cursed crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, of temperate Europe, Asia, and North America. It has a thick hollow stem a foot or two high, the lower leaves stalked and three-lobed, the petals small, and the carpels very numerous. The juice is very acrid, and is used by beggars to produce sores; but the plant is in some places eaten after boiling.

2. See Vallisneria.

water-cell (wá'tér-sel), n. 1. One of several diverticula of the paunch of the camel, serving to store up water. See water-bag, 1.

These, the so-called water-cells, serve to strain off from the contents of the paunch, and to retain in store, a considerable quantity of water. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 328.

2. A voltaic cell in which the liquid is pure water.

water-centiped (wá'tér-sen'ti-ped), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-charger (wá'tér-chär'jér), n. A device for filling the water-passages of a pump, so that it may act promptly when started.

water-chat (wá'tér-chat), n. 1. A bird of the family Hemicuridae.—2. A South American tyrant-flycatcher of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, of which there are many genera and species; a water-cap. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-check (wá'tér-ček), n. A check-valve for regulating a supply of water, as in the Gifford injector. E. H. Knight.

water-chestnut (wá'tér-ches'nut), n. See Trapa.

water-chevrotain (wá'tér-shev'ró-tán), n. An aquatic African traguline, Hyomyschus aquaticus, belonging to the family Tragulidae, and thus related to the kanchil and napu.

water-chicken (wá'tér-chik'en), n. The common gallinule, Gallinula galeata. Ralph and Bagg, 1886. [Oneida county, New York.]

water-chickweed (wá'tér-chik'wéd), n. 1. A small, smooth, and green tufted herb, Montia fontana, found throughout Europe, in northern Asia, from arctic America down the west coast to California, and in the Andes to their southern extremity. Also blinking-chickweed (which see).—2. A name for Callitriche verna and Stellaria (Malachium) aquatica.

water-chinkapin (wá'tér-ching'ka-pin), n. The American nelumbo, Nelumbo lutea, or primarily its edible nut-like seed: so named from the resemblance of the seeds to chinkapins. They are borne immersed in pits in the large top-shaped receptacle. Also wankapin, yoncopin.

water-cicada (wá'tér-si-ká'dä), n. A water-boatman.

water-clam (wá'tér-klam), n. A bivalve of the family Spondylidae; a thorn-oyster. See cut under Spondylus.

water-clock (wá'tér-klok), n. A clepsydra.

A clepsydra, or waterclock, which played upon Flutes the hours of the night at a time when they could not be seen on the Index. Dr. Burney, Hist. Music, I. 512.

water-closet (wá'tér-kloz'et), n. A privy having some contrivance for carrying off the discharges through a waste-pipe below by the agency of water.

water-cock (wá'tér-kok), n. The kora, Gallixer cristata, a large dark gallinule of India, Ceylon, Java, and islands eastward, horned with a red caruncle on top of the head.

water-colly (wá'tér-kol'i), n. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Prov. Eng.]

water-color (wá'tér-kul'or), n. 1. Painting, especially artistic painting, with pigments for which water and not oil is used as a solvent.—2. A pigment adapted or prepared for painting in this method.

Some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontented; . . .
And never yet did insurrection want Such water-colours to impart his cause.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 80.

Water-colours are sold in four forms, in cakes, pastilles, pans, and tubes. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, xxii.

3. A painting executed by this method, or with pigments of this kind.

The Art Galleries opened every year, and, besides the National Gallery, there were the Society of British Artists, the Exhibition of Water Colours, and the British Institution in Pall Mall. W. Beunt, Fifty Years Ago, p. 135.

Also used attributively in all senses.

water-colored (wá'tér-kul'ord), a. Of the color of water; like water. [Rare.]

The other [sort of cherry], which hangs on the branch like grapes, is water colored within, of a faintish sweet, and greedily devoured by the small birds.

Beverley, Virginia, iv. ¶ 12.

water-coloring (wá'tér-kul'gr-ing), n. The use of water-colors, or work executed in water-colors or pigments of similar nature. [Trade use.]

The Dutch and rose pinks are sometimes used, but they cannot be relied upon in water-colouring.

Paper-hanger, p. 78.

water-colorist (wá'tér-kul'gr-ist), n. One who paints in water-colors.

water-comparator (wá'tér-kom'pā-rā-tor), n. An apparatus for comparing thermometers with a standard, consisting essentially of a reservoir containing water, with means for obtaining different temperatures and for maintaining the whole mass at the same temperature during a series of observations.

water-cooler (wá'tér-kō'lér), n. Any device for cooling water; especially, a vessel with non-conducting walls in which water for drinking is placed with ice. Such coolers are fitted with a faucet in the lower part, for drawing off the water. The effect of other coolers is due to evaporation through their porous walls. See olia, 3.

Water-cooler.
a, outer shell; b, non-conducting filling; c, inner shell water-core (wá'tér-kōr), n. 1. In founding, a hollow core placed inside the mold, within which a current of cold water can be made to pass to absorb the heat and hasten the cooling of the casting: used especially to cool the bore of cast guns.—2. In some forms of car-axle, a quantity of water in a hermetically closed cavity, intended to take up heat from the journals.—3. A blemish, common in some varieties of the apple, in which the flesh about the core assumes a watery, translucent appearance.

watercourse (wá'tér-kōrs), n. 1. A stream of water; a river or brook.

The woods climb up boldly along the hillsides, overshadowing every little dingle and watercourse.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, iii.

2. A channel or canal made for the conveyance of water, or serving for conveyance by water.

Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters.

Job xxxviii. 25.

Scouring the water-courses thorough the cities;

A fine periphrasis of a kennel-raker.

Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, iii. 1.

3. In law, a stream of water, usually flowing in a definite channel having a bed and sides or banks, and usually discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Bigelow. The condition of being occasionally dry does not deprive it of the character of a watercourse; but occasional flows of water caused by unusual rains, or melting of snow, and following a channel which is usually dry, do not constitute a watercourse. The owner of a watercourse has, within certain limits, a right to have it flow substantially unimpaired by the owners above and below. A grant of a watercourse may mean a grant of (1) the easement or the right to the running of water; (2) the channel which contains the water, the pipe, or drain; or (3) the land over which the water flows. George Jessel, Master of the Rolls water-cow (wá'tér-kou), n. The common domestic Indian buffalo, Bos bubalus or Bubalus bubalus; the water-buffalo: so called by English residents in translating a Chinese name, from the habit it has of seeking the water to escape the annoyance of insects. It is not a distinct species. The same habit is strongly marked in the African or Cape buffalo, B. caffer, and may be observed of domestic cattle anywhere. See onta under buffalo.

water-cracker (wá'tér-krak'ér), n. 1. A water-biscuit.—2. A Prince Rupert's drop. See detonating bulb, under detonating.

A water cracker, as they [Prince Rupert's drops] are called in the factory. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 181.

water-craft (wá'tér-kráft), n. Vessels and boats plying on water.

water-crake (wá'tér-krāk), n. 1. The common spotted crane of Europe, Porzana maruetta: distinguished from the lund-crake, Crex pratensis.—2. The water-rail, Rallus aquaticus. Montagu.—3. The water-ouzel: a misnomer. Willughby; Ray. [Local, Eng.]

water-crane (wá'tér-krān), n. 1. An apparatus for supplying water from an elevated tank, as to the tender of a locomotive.—2. A crane operated by hydraulic power.

water-cress (wá'tér-kres), n. [< ME. waterkresse, watyrcresse, waterkirs; < water + cress.] A creeping herb of springs and streams, Nasturtium officinale, from antiquity used as a spring salad, and now very widely cultivated. See cress and Nasturtium (with cut). The name is extended to the genus—N. pulsatre, a weedy species, being called marsh or yellow water-cress, or marsh-cress.

water-crow (wá'tér-krō), n. 1. The common European coot, Fulica atra: from its blackish plumage. [Local, Eng.]—2. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—3. The darter, snake-bird, or water-turkey, Plotus aninga. [Southern U. S.]

water-crowfoot (wá'tér-krō'fūt), n. The name of several aquatic species of Ranunculus, primarily R. aquatilis, the common white water-crowfoot, a plant found through the north temperate zone and in Australia. The yellow water-crowfoot is R. multifidus.

watercup (wá'tér-kup), n. 1. The pennywort, Hydrocotyle: by translation of the genus name.—2. The trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flara.

water-cure (wá'tér-kūr), n. Hydrotherapy or balneotherapy; a system of medical treatment by means of water in any form or mode of application.

water-deck (wá'tér-dek), n. A painted piece of canvas used for covering the saddle and bridle, girths, etc., of a dragoon's horse. [Eng.]

water-deer (wá'tér-dēr), n. 1. A small Chinese musk-deer, Hydropotes inermis, of somewhat aquatic habits. It resembles the ordinary musk-deer in general, being of small size, hornless in both sexes, and with protrusive upper canines in the male; but some technical characters cause it to fall in another genus.

Chinese Water-deer (Hydropotes inermis).

2. The African water-chevrotain. This is a traguloid, quite different from the foregoing.

water-deerlet (wá'tér-dēr'let), n. The African water-chevrotain.

water-devil (wá'tér-dev'l), n. 1. The larva or grub of various aquatic insects, as of the genus Hydrophilus. H. piceus is a common British species.—2. The dobson or hellgrammite. See Corydatus, and cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-dock (wá'tér-dok), n. A tall dock, Rumex Hydrolapathum, of temperate Europe and Asia. Also called horse- or water-sorrel. R. aquatilis also appears under this name. The great or American water-dock is R. britannica (R. orbiculatus).

water-doctor (wá'tér-dok'tor), n. 1. A hydropathist. [Colloq.]—2. One of a former school of medical practitioners the members of which pretended that all diseases could be diagnosed by simple inspection of the urine.

water-dog (wá'tér-dog), n. 1. A dog accustomed to or delighting in the water, or trained to go into the water in pursuit of game, as a water-spaniel.—2. One of various kinds of large salamanders; a mud-puppy. See axolotl, Melospoma, and cut under hellbender. Also water-puppy.—3. A small, irregular, floating cloud in a rainy season, supposed to indicate rain. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Water-dogs, . . . dark clouds that seem to travel through the air by themselves, and indicate a storm. Halliwell makes them identical with mares-tails, but they are distinct things in Surrey language.

G. L. Gower, Surrey Provincialisms (Eng. Dial. Soc.).

4. A sailor, especially an old sailor; a salt; one thoroughly accustomed to life in and on the water. [Colloq.]

The Sandwich Islanders are complete water-dogs, and therefore very good in boating.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 94.

water-dragon (wá'tér-drag'on), n. An old name of the water-arum, Calla palustris, also assigned to Altha palustris, perhaps by confusion of the Latin names. Britten and Holland.

water-drain (wá'tér-drān), n. A drain or channel through which water may run.

water-drainage (wá'tér-drā'nāj), n. The draining off of water.

water-dressing (wá'tér-dres'ing), n. The constant application of water to a wound, by immersion, irrigation, or compresses.

water-drink (wá'tér-drink), n. [< ME. water-drinch; < water + drink.] A drink of water.

Alls ift thu drunke waterdrinche.

Ormulum (ed. White), l. 14482.

water-drinker (wá'tér-drink'kér), n. [< ME. water drynkare; < water + drinker.] 1. A drinker of water.

Water drynkare. Aqueibibus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

2. An advocate of abstinence from intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist. [Colloq.]

water-drip (wá'tér-drip), n. A pan or receptacle to receive the waste water from a water-cooler. Car-Builder's Dict.

water-drop (wá'tér-drop), n. A drop of water; specifically, a tear.

Let not women's weapons, water-drops,

Stain my man's cheeks! Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 280.

water-dropper (wá'tér-drop'ér), n. A contrivance devised by Sir William Thomson, and used particularly in the measurement of the electrical potential of the atmosphere. It consists of an insulated metallic cylinder containing water, with a projecting nozzle, from which the water is allowed to drop freely. Each drop carries with it a small charge, and finally the apout and connecting-rod gain the potential of the air; this may then be measured by a quadrant electrometer.

water-dropwort (wá'tér-drop'wért), n. The umbelliferous plant Eranthe fistulosa, or any plant of that genus. The hemlock water-dropwort is the highly poisonous E. crocata.

water-dust (wá'tér-dust), n. A collective name for the extremely minute droplets or particles of water which compose clouds and haze. [Rare.]

water-eagle (wá'tér-ē'gl), n. The fish-hawk or osprey. [Rare.]

watered (wá'térd), a. Marked with or exhibiting waved lines or bands bearing some resemblance to those which might be produced by the action of water. Also waved. Watered silk, silk upon which a wave-like and changeable pattern has been produced by moistening and pressure. The name is sometimes restricted to material of which the pattern is confined to parallel lines, as distinguished from moiré antique. See moiré and moiré.

water-elder (wá'tér-el'dér), n. The guelder-rose, Viburnum Opulus.

water-elephant (wá'tér-el'fānt), n. The hippopotamus or river-horse.

water-elevator (wá'tér-el'fā-vā-tor), n. 1. Any device for raising buckets in wells, or for lifting water to a higher level for purposes of irrigation, etc.—2. A lift or elevator in which the operating force is the weight or pressure of water; a hydraulic elevator.

water-elm (wá'tér-elm), n. The common white elm, Ulmus Americana.

water-engine (wá'tér-en'jin), n. An engine to raise water; also, an engine propelled by water.

waterer (wá'tér-ér), n. 1. One who waters, in any sense of the word: as, a stock waterer.

Neither the planter nor the waterer have any power to make it [religion] take root and grow in your hearts.

Locke, Paraphrase on 1 Cor. iii. 7.

2. That with which one waters; a vessel, utensil, or other contrivance for sprinkling water on plants, watering animals, etc.

water-eringo (wá'tér-ē-ring'gō), n. A plant, Eryngium yuccifolium (E. aquaticum), otherwise called button-snakeroot. See Eryngium.

water-ermine (wá'tér-ēr'min), n. A British tiger-moth, Spilosoma urtica, chiefly white and yellow marked with black. [Eng.]

water-extractor (wá'tér-eks-trak'tor), n. In dyeing, a rotatory apparatus for freeing dyed goods from water by the action of centrifugal force.

waterfall (wá'tér-fāl), n. [= 1.] waterfall = G. wasserfall (cf. Sw. rattenfall, Dan. randfald); as water + fall.] 1. A steep fall or flow of water from a height; a cascade; a cataract.

Down shower the gambolling waterfalls.

Tennyson, Sea-Fairies.

2. A neck-tie or scarf with long drooping ends. [Colloq.]

He was suddenly confronted in the walk by Benjamin, the Jew money-lender, smoking a cigar, and dressed in a gaudy figured satin waistcoat and waterfall of the same material. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. iii.

3. A chignon. [Colloq.]

The brown silk net, which she had supposed thoroughly trustworthy, had given way all at once into a great hole under the waterfall, and the soft hair would fret itself through and threaten to stray untidily.

Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, iii.

water-farming (wá'tér-fār'ming), n. The cultivation of plants growing in water.

A few miles away, the native lotus grows luxuriantly, a relic, it is believed, of Indian water-farming.

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 858.

water-feather, water-featherfoil (wá'tér-féw'ér, -féw'ér-fóil), n. The featherfoil or water-violet Hottonia, especially the British species H. palustris: so named from its finely dissected immersed leaves.

water-fennel (wá'tér-fen'el), n. One of the water-dropworts, Eranthe Phellandrium.

water-fern (wá'tér-térn), n. 1. A fern of the genus Osmunda; specifically, O. regalis.—2. A plant of the order Marsileaceae.

water-fight (wá'tér-fit), n. A naval battle. [Rare.]

Cæsar . . . awaits at anchor the coming of his whole fleet, mean while with his legatts and tribuns consulting, and giving order to fit all things for what might happen in such a various and floating water-fight as was to be expected. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

water-figwort (wá'tér-fíg'wért), n. The common European figwort, Scrophularia nodosa.

water-filter (wá'tér-fíl'tér), n. An appliance for filtering water; a filter.—Water-filter nut. Same as clearing-nut.

water-finder (wá'tér-fin'dér), n. One who practises rhabdomancy, or uses the divining-rod to discover water; a bletonist.

water-fire (wá'tér-fir), n. [Tr. of a Tamil name.]

A low wood, Bergia ammannioides of the Elatinaceae, found in rice-fields and marshy grounds in the tropical Old World. The name alludes to a supposed aridity.

water-flag (wá'tér-flag), n. The yellow flag, Iris Pseudocorus. Also called yellow iris and flower-de-luce.

water-flannel (wá'tér-flan'el), n. A felt-like substance composed of the matted filaments of some conferva or similar alga which multiplies in submerged meadows, and is deposited by the retiring waters.

water-flaxseed (wá'tér-flaks'séd), n. The larger duckweed, Lemna polyrrhiza: so called from the shape and minute size of the fronds.

water-flea (wá'tér-flé), n. One of numerous small or minute crustaceans which skip about in the water like fleas, as Daphnia pulex; any branchiopod. See Daphniidæ, Cladocera, Cyclops.

water-float (wá'tér-flót), n. A float placed in a boiler, cistern, etc., to control a valve.

water-flood (wá'tér-flúd), n. [< ME. waterflood, < AS. wæterflōd; as water + flood.] A flood of water; an inundation.

Let not the waterflood overflow me. Ps. lxx. 15.
In the month of May, namely on the 2d day, came downe great water floods, by reason of sodaine showres of halles and raies. Stow, Annals, p. 708.

water-flounder (wá'tér-floun'dér), n. The sand-flounder. [Local, U. S.]

waterflow (wá'tér-flō), n. A flow or current of water; the amount of water flowing.

The work concludes with articles on the cost of hydraulic power, and upon meters for measuring waterflow. Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 247.

water-flowing (wá'tér-flō'ing), u. Flowing like water; streaming. [Rare.]

My mercy dried their water-flowing tears. Shak., 8 Hen. VI., iv. 8. 43.

water-fly (wá'tér-flí), n. 1. Some winged aquatic insect; specifically, a member of the family Perlidæ; a stone-fly.—2. A source of petty annoyance; an insignificant but troublesome person or thing. [Rare.]

How the poor world is pestered with such waterflies, diminutives of nature! Shak., T. and C., v. i. 38.

water-foot (wá'tér-fút), n. One of the ambulacral pedicels of an echinoderm; a tube-foot.

water-fowl (wá'tér-fowl), n. [< ME. watyr fowl; < water + fowl.] 1. Same as water-birds.—2. In a restricted sense, swimming birds, especially those which, as the Anseres, are used for food or for any reason engage the attention of sportsmen.

water-fox (wá'tér-foks), n. The carp, Cyprinus carpio: so called from its supposed cunning. I. Walton. Compare water-sheep.

water-frame (wá'tér-frám), n. The original spinning-frame invented by Arkwright, which was driven by water-power (whence the name). Otherwise called throstle and throstle-frame. See cut in next column.

water-fright (wá'tér-frit), n. Hydrophobia.

water-fringe (wá'tér-frinj), n. See Limnanthemum.

water-furrow (wá'tér-fur'ō), n. [< ME. waterforowe, waterfoore; < water + furrow.] In agri., a deep furrow made for conducting water from a ground and keeping it dry; an open drain.

Waterforowe, in londe. Ellis, sulus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

Arkwright's Water-frame.

water-furrow (wá'tér-fur'ō), v. t. [< water-furrow, n.] To plow or open water-furrows in; drain by means of water-furrows.

Seed husbandry sown, water-furrow thy ground, That rain when it cometh may run away round. Tassie, October's Husbandry, st. 7.

water-gage (wá'tér-gáj), n. 1. Any device for indicating the height of water in a reservoir, tank, boiler, or other vessel.

The most common form is a glass tube placed on the front of a boiler, and connected at the top with a pipe opening into the steam-space above the water and below with a pipe opening into the water in the boiler. The water and steam fill the tube and indicate the height of the water in the boiler. See gage-cock. Also called water-indicator.

2. A wall or bank to restrain or hold back water.

water-gall (wá'tér-gál), n. [Also dial. water-gael, water-gull; = G. wasser-galle, a cavity in the earth made by a torrent, a bog, quagmire, < wasser, water, + galle, seen also in G. regen-galle, an imperfect rainbow, end or fragment of a rainbow, an oxeve, water-gall, weather-gall, appar. in orig. like leel. galli, a defect, flaw, hence a barren spot: see gall.] 1. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water. Imp. Dict.—2. An appearance in the sky regarded as presaging the approach of rain; a rainbow-colored spot; an imperfectly formed or a secondary rainbow. Also called weather-gall.

And round about her tear-distained eye Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky; These water-galls in her dim element Foretell new storms. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1588.
Their reason is but a low, obscure, and imperfect shadow thereof, as the water-gall is of the rain-bow. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 50.
I am told a second rainbow above the first is called in the Isle of Wight a water-gall. Halliwell (under water-dogs).

water-gang (wá'tér-gang), n. A trench or course for conveying a stream of water; a mill-race. Jamieson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

water-gap (wá'tér-gap), n. See gap, 2.

water-gas (wá'tér-gás), n. A gas, non-luminous in its pure form, derived in part from the decomposition of steam. The apparatus for making it consists of a furnace for anthracite coal or other fuel, connected at the top with a tower filled with loose brick and called a regenerator. The products of combustion pass through the regenerator, and raise it to a white heat. Steam is then admitted below the furnace, and, passing upward through the fire and through the regenerator, is decomposed. While the steam is passing the furnace, either coal reduced to dust or crude naphtha is allowed to fall through the ascending steam over the fire. Complicated chemical reactions take place, the result being the formation of quantities of fixed gas. There are also other methods closely allied to this. By one process the non-luminous gas is afterward enriched by the addition of a hydrocarbon, as petroleum or naphtha. Water-gas is commonly thus treated, and used as an illuminating gas; but it is also used, in its non-luminous form, as a heating gas for cooking and other purposes.

water-gate (wá'tér-gát), n. [ME. watergate; < water + gate.] 1. A gateway through which water passes, or a gate by which it may be excluded or confined; a flood-gate.

Fro heven, oute of the watergatis, The reyny storme felle downe algaits. Gower, Conf. Amant., iii.

2. A gate by which access is gained to a river, fountain, well, or other body or supply of water.

And at the fountain gate . . . they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall above the house of David, even unto the water gate east ward. Neh. xii. 37.

As they reached the water-gate, the rain had ceased for a time, and a gleam of sunlight shone upon the river, and rested on the Queen's barge as it approached. J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, iv.

3. A water-plug or valve. E. H. Knight.

water-gavel (wá'tér-gav'el), n. In Eng. law, a rent paid for fishing or any other benefit derived from a river.

water-germander (wá'tér-jér-man'dér), n. A plant, Teucrium Scordium.

water-gilder (wá'tér-gíl'dér), n. One who practises the art of water-gilding.

water-gilding (wá'tér-gíl'ding), n. Same as wash-gilding.

water-gillyflower (wá'tér-jíl'i-flou-ér), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris.

water-gladiole (wá'tér-glád'i-ól), n. See flow-ering rush (under rush).

water-glass (wá'tér-glás), n. 1. A water-clock or clepsydra.

Full time of defence measured by the water-glass. Grote, Hist. Greece, ii. 72.

2. An instrument for making observations beneath the surface of water, consisting of a tube with a glass bottom; a water-telescope.

With a water-glass over the side, you look down on the bright array of fishes, whose every movement you can note. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 180.

3. Same as soluble glass (which see, under glass).

Water-glass painting may be explained . . . very briefly. It is simply water-colour on dry plaster, fixed afterwards with a solution of flint applied to it in spray as the solution of gum-lac is applied to a charcoal drawing. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 236.

water-glue (wá'tér-glü), n. Waterproof glue.

The strings [of bows] being made of verie good glue, with a kinde of waterglue to resist wet and moyesture. Sir J. Smyth, quoted in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 54.

water-god (wá'tér-god), n. In myth., a deity that presides over the waters, or over some particular body, stream, or fountain of water.

water-grampus (wá'tér-gram'pus), n. Same as grampus, 4.

water-grass (wá'tér-grás), n. 1. The manna-grass, Glyceria fluitans. [Fishermen's name.]

—2. A very succulent grass, Paspalum laevé. [Southern U. S.]—3. The water-cress, Nasturtium officinale. [Ireland.]—4. Species of Equisetum.—5. The velvet-grass, Holcus. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-gruel (wá'tér-gró'el), n. Gruel made of water and meal, flour, etc., and eaten without milk; thin or weak gruel.

I could eat water-gruel with thee a month for this jest, my dear rogue. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel Upon the Strength of Water-Gruel? Prior, Alma, iii.

water-guard (wá'tér-gärd), n. A river or harbor police; customs officers detailed to watch ships in order to prevent smuggling or other violations of law.

water-gull (wá'tér-gul), n. A dialectal form of water-gall.

water-gum (wá'tér-gum), n. A small tree of New South Wales, Tristania neriifolia, the timber of which is close-grained and elastic, and valuable for boat-building.

water-gut (wá'tér-gut), n. An alga of the genus Ulex, natural order Ulvaceae. The most general form, U. enteromorpha, var. intestinalis, occurs in fresh as well as salt water, U. enteromorpha, var. compressa, being the more common on tidal rocks. When floating in the water these plants very much resemble the intestines of an animal (whence the name).

water-hairgrass (wá'tér-här'grás), n. A grass, Catabrosa aquatica, growing in shallow water, widely in the north temperate zone, having a panicle with many half-whorls of slender branches. Also water-whorlgrass.

water-hammer (wá'tér-ham'ér), n. 1. The concussion of a moving volume of water in a pipe or passage, caused by sudden stoppage of flow, as by the abrupt closing of a faucet.—2. The noise, resembling a blow of a hammer, caused by the presence of water in a steam-pipe when live steam is passed through it.—3. A philosophical toy consisting of a hermetically sealed tube from which the air has been exhausted and which contains some water. It is so called because the water strikes against the tube with a noise similar to that of a hammer, there being no air to impede its motion.

4. A metal hammer heated in a flame or in boiling water. Tapping the skin with this hammer for a few seconds will cause a blister. It is used as a counter-irritant or a mild cautery.

water-hare (wá'tér-hár), n. 1. The water-rabbit. See cut under swamp-hare.—2. The spotted cavy, or paca, Cataglyphis paca.

water-haze (wá'tér-ház), n. Haze composed of water-particles, as distinguished from haze consisting mainly of particles of dust and organic matter. See haze.

water-heater (wá'tér-hé'tér), n. A heating-apparatus which performs its functions by the agency of hot water.

water-hemlock (wá'tér-hem'lok), n. 1. See Cicuta.—2. The hemlock water-dropwort, Enanthe crocata, otherwise called dead-tongue; also (E. phellandrium, distinguished as fine-leaved water-hemlock).

water-hemp (wá'tér-hemp), n. 1. See hemp.—2. The hemp-agrimony, Eupatorium cannabinum.

water-hen (wá'tér-hen), n. Some aquatic bird likened to a hen. (a) The moor-hen or gallinule of Great Britain, Gallinula chloropus. (b) The American coot, Fulica americana. (Massachusetts.) (c) An Australian bird of the rail family and genus Tridionyx. See cut under Tridionyx, and compare water-cock.—Spotted water-hen. Same as spotted rail. See rail. [Local, Eng.]

water-hickory (wá'tér-hik'ó-ri), n. Same as bitter pecan (which see, under pecan).

water-hoarhound (wá'tér-hór'hound), n. A plant of the genus Lycopus, chiefly L. Europæus.

water-hog (wá'tér-hog), n. 1. The African river-hog, Potamocharus penicillatus. See cut under Potamocharus.—2. The South American capibara, Hydrocharus capibara. Also called tailless hippopotamus and short-nosed tapir.

water-hole (wá'tér-höl), n. A hole or hollow where water collects. In Australia, a small natural or artificial reservoir; in South Africa, a natural pool, or water-pool. This word is chiefly used in Australia, where it means a small pond or pool of water, and especially such as are filled during the rainy season and dry up when that ceases, or soon after.

In the dry weather, as the small lagoons and water-holes scattered all over the country [Australia] got low and dried up, large numbers of . . . wild ducks congregated on the big lagoon in front of Mount Spencer station. H. F. Hutton, Advance Australia, p. 88.

We have been drafting close here up at the one-eyed waterhole. Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head-Station, p. 84.

waterhole (wá'tér-höl), v. i.; pret. and pp. waterholed, ppr. waterholing. [<water-hole, n.] In coffee-cultivation. See the quotation.

A third operation is called "trenching," or waterholing. The trenches are made across the slope, and . . . the holes are left open to act as catch-drains, and as receptacles for wash, weeds, prunings, and other vegetable matters. Spono-Bency Manuf., I. 638.

water-horse (wá'tér-hórs), n. Same as horse-pile.

water-horsetail (wá'tér-hórs'tál), n. A plant of the genus Chara.

water-house (wá'tér-hous), n. A house or dwelling upon the water; a ship.

The thing by her commanded is to see Dover's dreadful cliff; passing, in a poor water-house, the dangers of the merciless channel 'twixt that and Calais, five long hours' sail, with three poor weeks' victuals. Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, I. 1.

water-hyssop (wá'tér-his'óp), n. See Herpestis.

water-ice (wá'tér-ís), n. A preparation of water and sugar, flavored and frozen; a sherbet.

water-inch (wá'tér-inch), n. In hydraul., a measure of water equal to the quantity discharged in 24 hours through a circular opening of 1 inch diameter leading from a reservoir, under the least pressure—that is, when the water is only so high as just to cover the orifice. This quantity is very nearly 500 cubic feet.

water-indicator (wá'tér-in'di-ká-tor), n. A device for indicating the weight of water in a boiler or a tank, or for giving an alarm by permitting steam to escape, sounding a whistle, etc., when the water falls below a certain level; a water-gage.

wateriness (wá'tér-i-nes), n. The state of being watery. Arbutnot.

watering (wá'tér-ing), n. [<late ME. watrynge, watrynge (= MLG. watering = MHG. wasserunge, G. wässerung); verbal n. of water, v.] 1. The act of one who waters, in any sense.

Doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Luke xiii. 15.

The clouds are for the watering of the earth. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 168.

Specifically—2. The art or process of giving to the surface of anything a wave-like or veined appearance of somewhat ornamental effect; also, the marking so produced. Compare water,

v. t., 3, and watered silk (under watered).—3. A watering-place: as, "the watering of Saint Thomas" (better known as St. Thomas a Waterings), Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 826.—4. In flax-manuf., same as retting, 1.—Watering of the mouth, an abundant secretion of saliva excited, through a reflex nervous influence, by the suggestion, smell, or sight of appetizing food.

watering-call (wá'tér-ing-kál), n. Milit., a call or sound of a trumpet on which cavalry assemble to water their horses.

watering-can (wá'tér-ing-kan), n. Same as watering-pot.

watering-cart (wá'tér-ing-kárt), n. 1. A barrel or cistern mounted on wheels, used for watering plants. Various special forms are made, as one for watering plants in drills, the water escaping through perforated pipes set at the proper distances apart.

2. A large tank, of whatever form, mounted on a wagon-body, used for watering streets.

watering-house (wá'tér-ing-hous), n. A house or tavern where water is obtained for cab-horses, etc. Compare waterman, 2.

Carriages . . . roll swiftly by; watermen . . . who have been shouting and rushing about for the last two hours, retire to their watering-houses, to solace themselves with the creature comforts of pipes and purf.

Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, II.

watering-place (wá'tér-ing-plás), n. [<ME. watrynge-place; <watering + place.] 1. A place where water may be obtained, as for drinking, for watering cattle, or for supplying ships.

Watrynge Place, where beestys byñ wateryd.

Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

The force will have to trust to known watering-places where there are wells.

Col. Fergusson, in E. Sartorius's In the Soudan, p. 56.

2. Especially, a place of resort for a particular kind of water, as mineral water; a well, spring, town, etc., famous for its waters; in later use, a bathing-place; a seaside resort; loosely, any summer resort.

The discovery of a saline spring . . . suggested to a too constructive brain the possibility of turning Treby Magna into a fashionable watering-place.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, III.

The term [watering-places] was naturally extended to include places resorted to for sea bathing, and sometimes, as at Scarborough, the visitors could either have the benefit of the spa or the salt water, that famous watering-place having both of these attractions.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 378.

watering-pot (wá'tér-ing-pot), n. 1. A vessel, usually a somewhat tall can, most often of cylindrical section, sometimes oval, with a long spout springing from near the base, used for watering plants and for other similar purposes, as sprinkling sidewalks. The spout is generally fitted with a rose, often movable, for distributing the water in a number of fine streams. It is usually made of tin-plate or galvanized sheet-iron, and is intended to be managed by hand. Also called watering-can.

2. In conch., any species of the genus Aspergillum, as A. vaginiferum. These are true bivalves of the family Gastropodidae (or Tubicolidae), not distantly related to the terebros, and all bore into hard substances. The valves proper are very small in comparison with the long hard tube with which they are soldered. The species named has this tube cylindrical and clubbed or knobbed at both ends, with one end closed by a perforated plate; the whole formation suggesting the sprinkler of a watering-pot. It inhabits the Red Sea, and other species of Aspergillum are found in Indo-Pacific waters. Also called watering-pot shell.

watering-trough (wá'tér-ing-tróf), n. A trough in which water is provided for domestic animals.

water-injector (wá'tér-in-jek'tor), n. See injector.

waterish (wá'tér-ish), a. [Formerly also watrish; *<ME. waterish, <AS. wæterisc; as water + ish.] 1. Abounding in or containing water; sprinkled, moistened, or diluted with water; watery; aqueous.

Frost is wheresoever is any waterish humour, as is in all woods, either more or less; and you know that all things frozen and icy will rather break than bend.

Acham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 115.

Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy Can buy this unprized precious maid of me.

Shak., Lear, I. 1. 261.

2. Consisting mainly of water; hence, thin; weak; poor.

Such nice and waterish diet. Shak., Othello, III. 3. 15.

3. Juicy; succulent. [Rare.]

The Summer
Invited my then ranging eyes to look on Large fields of ripened corn, presenting trifles
Of waterish petty dainties.

Dekker and Ford, Sun's Darling, IV.

4. Pertaining to water, or having something of its characters; insipid: as, a waterish color or feel.

Some [flowers] of a sad or darke greene, some watrishe, blunkette, gray, grassie, hoarie, and Leeke coloured.

Touchstone of Complexions, p. 100.

Of watrish taste, the flesh not firme, like English beefe.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 183.

waterishness (wá'tér-ish-nes), n. The state or character of being waterish.

Waterishness, which is like the serosity of our blood.

Floyer.

water-jacket (wá'tér-ják'et), n. A casing containing water placed about something to keep it cool, or otherwise regulate its temperature. Compare water-mantle and water-box.

water-joint (wá'tér-joint), n. A joint through which water will not leak, as in the framework of a water-gate, the junction of two water-pipes, the gates of canal-locks, etc.

water-junket (wá'tér-jung'ket), n. The common sandpiper of Great Britain, Tringoides hypoleucis.

water-kelpie (wá'tér-kel'pi), n. A spirit or demon supposed to dwell in water. See kelpie.

The bonny grey mare did sweat for fear,

For she heard the water-kelpey roaring.

Annan Water (Child's Ballads, II. 189).

water-kind (wá'tér-kind), n. [<ME. water-kunde; <water + kind.] Water; the elements of water.

Latin boc seggth thatt Ennou Bitacnethth waterkindes.

Ornamentum (ed. White), I. 18087.

water-lade (wá'tér-lád), n. A channel or trench for conducting water; a drain; a gutter.

The channels were not skoured . . . for riverets and brookes to pass away, but the water-lades stopped up either through negligence or depopulation.

Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 741. (Davies.)

water-laid (wá'tér-lád), a. Noting three ropes laid into one: same as cable-laid.

Waterlander (wá'tér-lán-dér), n. [<D. Waterland, a district in North Holland, + -er.] One of the liberal wing of the Mennonites of the Netherlands. Beginning with less strict views of excommunication than those of the conservative wing, they gradually moved in the direction of still greater liberality, exchanged the name of Mennonites for Doopsgezinden (Baptist persuasion), refused to condemn any one for opinions which the Bible did not expressly pronounce essential to salvation, cooperated with William the Silent, and even accepted civil office. The division between them and their opponents gradually disappeared, and the two wings are now united in Holland on substantially the liberal basis of the Waterlanders. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 12.

Waterlandian (wá'tér-lán'di-an), n. [<Waterland (see Waterlander) + -ian.] Same as Waterlander.

water-language (wá'tér-lang'gwäj), n. Jocular abuse; chaff. [Rare.]

'Twas all water-language at these times, and no exceptions were to be taken. Amhurst, Terra Filus, No. 1.

water-laverock (wá'tér-lav'er-ok), n. Same as sandy laverock (which see, under laverock).

water-leader (wá'tér-lé'dér), n. [<ME. water-leider (cf. D. waterleiding = G. wasserleitung = Sw. vattenledning = Dan. vandledning, aque-duct); <water + leader.] A water-carrier.

The cocks and water-lederes. York Plays, p. 307.

waterleaf (wá'tér-léf), n. 1. Any plant of the genus Hydrophyllum (which see).—2. Paper in the first stage of manufacture, after it has been pressed between the felts: a technical use.

The structure of the waterleaf may be regarded as an interlacement of vegetable fibres in every direction.

Ure, Dict., III. 514.

water-leech (wá'tér-léch), n. [<ME. water-leche, waterleche; <water + leech.] Same as horse-leech.

Waterleche two ben dogtris, selende, Bring on, bring on. Wyclif, Prov. xxx. 15.

water-leg (wá'tér-leg), n. In steam-boilers, a vertical water-space connecting other water-spaces, and crossing a flue-space, by which its contents are heated.

water-lemon (wá'tér-lem'on), n. A species of passion-flower, Passiflora laurifolia, native in the West Indies and tropical South America, and cultivated there and in other warm countries; also, and primarily, its fruit. The latter is lemon-colored, oval in form, of the size of a peach, having a soft skin, and a very juicy pulp of a pleasant subacid flavor. The vine has the leaves entire, the flowers white with red blotches, the crown violet with white streaks. P. mak-formis, the sweet calabash, with a smaller fruit of similar flavor, is sometimes included under the name. The wild water-lemon is P. foetida, otherwise called (West Indian) lose-in-a-mist, bearing a delicate fruit of the size of a small cherry, but having ill-smelling leaves.

water-lens (wá'tér-lenz), n. A simple kind of lens, formed by a few drops of water placed in a small brass cell with blackened sides, and having a glass bottom. The upper surface of the water is more or less curved according to the diameter of the tube, and sometimes the convexity (and hence the magnifying power) can be raised by a screw at the side.

water-lentil (wá'tér-len'til), n. See lentil.

waterless (wá'tér-less), a. [ME. waterles, waterless, < AS. wæterleds, without water; as water + -less.] Lacking water; unsupplied or unmoistened with water; of a fish, out of water.

A monk when he is reccheless
Is likud til a fish that is waterless.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 180.

Frankincense, for which of old they went Through plain and desert waterless, and faced
The lion-haunted woods that edged the waste.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 217.

water-lettuce (wá'tér-let'is), n. See Pistia.

water-level (wá'tér-lev'el), n. 1. The surface of the water in any vessel or reservoir, natural or artificial, in which water is standing, as in a well, canal, pond, lake, etc.; also, the plane of saturation beneath the surface of the ground, or the plane below which the soil or rock remains saturated with water under the ordinary conditions of rainfall, etc.

But in strata occupying such a position, as well as in the gravel, all wells must be sunk by digging, and not bored, to the natural water-level, there being no superincumbent impermeable stratum to keep down the water at a level below that to which it would naturally have a tendency to rise.

Prestwich, Water-Bearing Strata of London, p. 6.

2. A leveling-instrument in which water is employed instead of mercury or spirit of wine. It consists of a tin tube, about 3 feet long, bent at right angles at each end, with a small short tube soldered on it at its center, by the aid of which it can be fixed upon some kind of a support or tripod. In the bent ends of the long tube are inserted two small glass vials with their bottoms cut off. Enough water is then poured in to about half fill the bottles when the instrument is level. By sighting across the surface of the water a level-line is got. The extreme cheapness and portability of this level make it serviceable sometimes, although it gives but a rough approximation to accuracy as compared with the best kind of spirit-level.

water-lily (wá'tér-lil'i), n. [< ME. watir-lili, watir-lyly; < water + lily.] 1. A plant of the genus Nymphaea (Nymphaea), which contains about 25 species distributed nearly throughout the world, but most freely in the northern hemisphere and the tropics. They are aquatic plants with a perennial rootstock, orbicular floating leaves, and large flowers, single on long scapes rising on the surface of the water. The flowers have numerous petals of a delicate texture, forming when expanded nearly a hemisphere—white, blue, red, or yellow. Several white water-lilies are the most familiar. The common European species is C. speciosa (N. alba), with leaves 6 or 8 and flowers 3 or 4 inches in diameter. The ordinary American species is C. (N.) odorata, with very sweet-scented flowers often 5½ inches wide, and leaves 5 to 9 inches broad, varying in color to pinkish or even bright pink-red, especially at Barnstable, Massachusetts. In the interior (United States) is found C. (N.) reniformis, with considerably larger leaves and flowers, scentless or slightly scented, and always white—the rootstock bearing numerous self-detaching tubers. The golden water-lily, C. (N.) flava, of Florida, which long escaped the notice of botanists, is a locally abundant species of moderate dimensions, with yellow flowers. C. mystica (N. Lotus), the specific Egyptian water-lily, with white, pink, or red flowers, and C. scutifolia (N. ærulaea), the blue water-lily, also of Egypt, are named among the lotuses. C. (N.) thermalis is a rare species occurring in warm springs in Hungary, and called Hungarian lotus. The Australian water-lily, C. (N.) gigantea, has the leaves in the larger specimens 18 inches broad, the flowers a foot broad with over 200 stamens, the petals blue, purple, pink, or rarely white. Another general name of the water-lilies is water-nymph. See Nymphaea.

2. The pond-lily, or yellow water-lily, Nymphaea (Nuphar) lutea. See pond-lily.—3. In general, any plant of the order Nymphaeaceae, the water-lily family. See the phrases below.—Blue water-lily. See def. 1.—Dwarf water-lily. Same as fringed water-lily.—Egyptian water-lily. See def. 1.—Fringed water-lily. See Ammanthemum.—New Zealand water-lily. See Ranunculus.—Prickly water-lily, Euryale ferox, which has the calyx and the under side of the leaves spiny. It is cultivated in India and China for its farinaceous seeds. See Euryale, 2.—Royal water-lily, the Victoria regia. See Victoria, 2.—Sweet-scented water-lily, Catalpa odorata. See def. 1.—Victoria water-lily. See Victoria, 2.—White water-lily. See def. 1.—Yellow water-lily. See def. 2.

water-lime (wá'tér-lim), n. Hydraulic lime. See hydraulic.—Water-lime group, in geol., a group of strata of Upper Silurian age, overlying the Onondaga Salt group, and forming the lower section of the Lower Helderberg group, according to the nomenclature of the New York Geological Survey. This group is of great importance, especially in Ulster county, New York, as furnishing a considerable part of the hydraulic cement manufactured in the United States. It abounds in those fossils to which the name Tentaculites has been given, and hence is known also as the Tentaculite group. See cement, 2, and cement-stone.

water-line (wá'tér-lin), n. 1. The line in which water at its surface verges or borders upon anything; specifically, in ship-building, one of the horizontal lines supposed to be described by the surface of the water on the sides of a ship, and exhibited at certain depths upon the sheer-draft. The most important of these lines are the light water-line, which marks the depression of the ship's body in the water when she is light or unladen, and the load water-line, which marks her depression in the water when laden.

2. Same as water-level, 1.

The [mineral] deposits are much more valuable where they are now worked . . . than they will be below water-line.
New York Tribune, Nov. 7, 1879.

3. A semi-transparent line or mark formed in paper during its manufacture; a water-mark. See water-mark, 3.

It is supposed . . . that the waterlines are perpendicular in folio, octavo, and decimo-octavo books, and horizontal in quarto and duodecimo.

De Morgan, Arithmetical Books, xlii.

water-lined (wá'tér-lind), a. Marked with water-lines: as, Irish linen water-lined paper.

water-liverwort (wá'tér-liv'ér-wért), n. The water-crowfoot, Ranunculus aquatilis.

water-lizard (wá'tér-liz'árd), n. 1. An aquatic amphibian with four legs and a tail, as a mud-puppy, water-dog, or hellbender. See triton, newt, and cuts under hellbender, Menobranchius, axolotl, and newt. [U. S.].—2. A water-monitor or varan. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-lobelia (wá'tér-lô-bé'liǎ), n. See Lobelia, 1.

water-lock (wá'tér-lok), n. Same as lock, 1, 8. Blount, Glossographia, 1670.

water-locust (wá'tér-lô'kust), n. A small species of honey-locust, Gleditsia monosperma, found in the southern United States, especially westward, in the bottom-lands, where it occupies large areas. The wood is of a rich dark-brown color, heavy, hard, and susceptible of polish. Also called swamp-locust.

water-logged (wá'tér-logd), a. [*< water + logged, of uncertain origin. In a view commonly accepted, logged, lit. 'rendered log-like,' i. e. heavy or clumsy in consequence of being filled with water; < log¹ + -ed². In another view, logged is lit. 'laid' or 'placed,' after Sw. vatten-lagga, lay in water, soak. Other explanations have been proposed; but none accurately applies to water-logged, except by assuming some confusion of the second element. In present use the word is undoubtedly associated with log¹.] Saturated or filled with water: applied specifically to a ship when by leaking and receiving a great quantity of water into her hold she has become so heavy as to be nearly or altogether unmanageable, though still keeping afloat.

In the course of the summer I had discovered a raft of pitch-pine logs with the bark on. . . . Though completely waterlogged and almost as heavy as lead, they not only burned long, but made a very hot fire.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 268.

The next day the Bon Homme Richard, quite water-logged, sank, with all the wounded on board.

N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 587.

water-lot (wá'tér-lot), n. A lot of ground which is under water; specifically, one of a regular system of city lots which are partly or wholly covered by the water of a bay, lake, or river, and may be filled in and converted into made ground for the erection of buildings, docks, etc.

Yesterday, he said, I bought a water-lot; that topsail-schooner lies at anchor there.

J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 244.

water-lotus (wá'tér-lô'tus), n. The Nelumbo. See lotus, 1.

water-lung (wá'tér-lung), n. One of the respiratory trees or ramifications of the cloaca of holothurians. They are present in most of the order Holothuroidea, and have an excretory or depuratory function by the continual passage of water through them.

water-lute (wá'tér-lüt), n. Any form of airtight joint formed by the agency of water; a water-seal or air-trap.

water-main (wá'tér-mán), n. In water-works, any one of the principal pipes or conduits running under streets, to which the lateral service-pipes for supply of houses on either side of the street are connected.

water-maise (wá'tér-máz), n. See maize.

waterman (wá'tér-mán), n.; pl. watermen (-men). [< water + man (= D. waterman = G. wassermann).] 1. A boatman; a ferryman; a man who manages water-craft; one who plies for hire on rivers, etc.

It does not become your gravity . . . to have offered this outrage on a waterman, . . . much less on a man of his civil coat.

B. Jones, Epilogue, III. 2.

My great grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, I.

2. One who carries or distributes water; specifically, a person who waits at a cab-stand for the purpose of supplying the horses with water, calling the cabmen when they are absent, etc. [Eng.]—Waterman's knot (naut.), a form of knot used to bend a rope about a post or bollard.

Waterman's Knot.

watermanship (wá'tér-man-ship), n. The functions, art, or skill of a waterman or oarsman; oarsmanship.

All the rowing interest of each society makes sport for itself and amusement for spectators on the banks with forms of watermanship which are lighter and more pleasant.

The Atlantic, LXVII. 792.

water-mantle (wá'tér-man'til), n. [Tr. of G. wassermantel.] The water-jacket, or layer of water, which incloses the space in which the cultures are placed in the incubator for bacteriological investigations, and to which heat is applied, and into which is dipped the regulator that serves to keep the temperature constant. [Rare.]

Between the room . . . and the water-mantle . . . a Schloesing's membrane-regulator . . . is extended.

Hueppe, Bacteriological Investigations (trans.), p. 189.

water-maple (wá'tér-má'pl), n. Same as red maple (which see, under maple).

water-marigold (wá'tér-mar'j-göld), n. An American aquatic, Bidens Beckii, of which most of the leaves are submerged and very finely dissected.

water-mark (wá'tér-märk), n. 1. The mark, line, or limit of the rise or height of water, as in a well, a river, the sea, etc.; a water-line; especially, a tide-mark.

The last tide had risen considerably above the usual water-mark.

Scott, Antiquary, vii.

2. A faintly marked letter, figure, or design in the fabric of paper, that denotes its size or its manufacturer, usually barely noticeable except when the sheet is held against strong light. It is made in the process of manufacture by the pressure of wires on the moist pulp. The water-marks used by the earlier paper-makers have given names to several of the present standard sizes of paper, as pot, foolscap, crowns, elephant, and post, the last being so called from the device of a postman's horn as water-mark.

water-mark (wá'tér-märk), v. t. 1. To mark or stamp with water-lines: as, to water-mark paper; a water-marked page.—2. To mark, inscribe, or embody in water-lines.

They are without the final refinement of the recurring title water-marked in the lower margins of the page.

The Century, XXXIX. 94.

water-meadow (wá'tér-med'ô), n. A meadow capable of being kept in a state of fertility by being overflowed with water at certain seasons from some adjoining stream.

The fire-flies flitted over the water-meadows outside.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 690.

water-measure (wá'tér-mezh'ür), n. A unit of measure used on board ships, five pecks according to a statute of Henry VII. It was regarded as a bushel, and was similarly subdivided. A statute of 1701 declares that a water-measure is round, and 18½ inches in diameter within the hoop, and 8 inches deep, and ordains that apples and pears shall be sold by this measure heaped.

water-measurer (wá'tér-mezh'ür-ér), n. Any water-bug of the heteropterous family Hydrometridæ.

watermelon (wá'tér-mel'on), n. A plant, Citrullus vulgaris (frequently named Cucumis Citrullus), or its fruit. The plant, supposed to be of Asiatic origin, is a slender trailing vine, requiring a warm soil. The fruit (a pepo) is of a spherical or usually elongated form, 1½ or 2 feet long, smooth and green, or sometimes variegated on the outside, containing within a rose-colored or sometimes yellowish pulp, pleasantly flavored, and abounding in a refreshing sweetish watery juice. The watermelon is largely cultivated in Egypt, India, China, Japan, America, southern France, and elsewhere.

Their Watermelons were much more large, and of several kinds, distinguished by the color of their meat and seed. . . . They are excellently good, and very pleasant to the taste, as also to the eye; having the rind of a lively green color, streaked and watered, the meat of a carnation, and the seed black and shining while it lies in the melon.

Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 19.

water-meter (wá'tér-mē'tér), n. 1. An instrument that measures the quantity of water that passes through it, as a gas-meter measures gas. There are various contrivances for this purpose. See cuts on following page.—2. An instrument for determining the amount Water-meters.

A, a, case; b, inlet and outlet; c, hard rubber rotating piston; d, gyrating spindle which drives the registering mechanism e, by means of a connection (not shown); f, dial.

B, a, a', case, composed of two cylinders cast integrally; b, one of the two plungers; c, valve actuated by d, controlling the flow into and out of the cylinder a. A similar valve in a controls the flow into and out of a', and in this way the plunger in each cylinder governs the flow into and out of the other. The plungers are hollow, and have very nearly the specific gravity of water. Their reciprocations, through a connection (not shown), drive the registering mechanism e. The inlet (not shown) is opposite the outlet e.

water-milfoil (wá'tér-mil'fóil), n. See milfoil.

water-mill (wá'tér-mil), n. A mill whose machinery is driven by water.

There are in this title 200. Schooles, 200. Innes, 400. water-miles, 600. water-Conduits, 700. Temples and Oratories. Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 47.

water-mint (wá'tér-mint), n. The bergamot-mint, Mentha aquatica, an herb of wet places in Europe and Asiatic Russia, naturalized in other localities, growing sparingly in the eastern United States. It affords a perfumers' oil. The water-mint or brook-mint of early usage was M. sylvestris. See mint 2.

Those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three—that is, burnet, wild thyme, and water-mint. Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887), p. 444.

water-mite (wá'tér-mít), n. Any mite of the family Hydrachnidæ; a water-tick. See Hydrachnidæ, and cut under Hydrachna. Also called water-spider.

water-moccasin (wá'tér-mok'á-sin), n. A water-adder: a name applied with little discrimination in the United States to several species of aquatic snakes; properly, the venomous Toxicophis or Ancistrodon piscivorus, with which the harmless Tropidonotus (or Nerodia sipedon) is sometimes confounded. See water-snake, and cut under moccasin.

water-mole (wá'tér-mól), n. 1. A desman; a member of the genus Myogale. See cut under desman.—2. The duck-mole, or duck-billed platypus, Ornithorhynchus paradoxus. See cut under duckbill.

water-monitor (wá'tér-mon'i-tór), n. A large water-lizard of the family Monitoridæ or Varanidæ; any aquatic monitor, or varan. One of the best-known is the Indian Varanus, or two-handed monitor, Monitor or Varanus salvator, attaining a length of 5 or 6 feet. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-monkey (wá'tér-mung'ki), n. A globular vessel with a straight upright neck, commonly of earthenware, used in tropical countries for holding water.

water-moss (wá'tér-mós), n. A moss of the genus Fontinalis (which see).

water-moth (wá'tér-móth), n. A caddis-fly: so called from its aquatic habits and resemblance to a moth. See cut under caddis-worm.

Every good disciple of Walton and lover of the "gentle art" knows the value of the caddis-fly or water-moth as bait. Riley, 6th Mo. Ent. Rep., p. 16.

water-motor (wá'tér-mó'tér), n. Any water-wheel or turbine; in a narrower and the more common sense, any form of small motor using water under pressure, and serving to drive light machinery, such as printing-presses and sewing-machines. Such motors are made in the form of over-shot wheels inclosed in a casing, reciprocating pistons in cylinders, and rotary engines. Another form is a small turbine designed to be fitted to a common house supply-pipe. Small engines with oscillating cylinders are also a, case supported on legs; b, gate-valve for regulating flow; c, buckets or floats attached to the outer margin of a disk keyed to the shaft of the band-wheel f. The buckets c play in an annular enlargement e of the case as they receive the impact of the stream flowing through b. The water is discharged at d.

used. Another form, employing the pressure of a large body of water to raise a smaller quantity, is called a water-pressure pump, but is essentially a water-motor used as a pump.

water-mouse (wá'tér-mous), n. An Australian murine rodent of the genus Hydromys and subfamily Hydromyinae. See cut under beaver-rat.—White-bellied water-mouse. See white-bellied.—Yellow-bellied water-mouse. See yellow-bellied.

water-murrain (wá'tér-mur'án), n. A disease among cattle.

water-net (wá'tér-net), n. See Hydrodictyon.

water-newt (wá'tér-nút), n. An aquatic newt; a triton. See cuts under newt and axolotl.

water-nixy (wá'tér-ník'si), n. [After G. was-ser-nix; < water + nix.] A water-spirit; an elf inhabiting the water.

The shallowness of a water-nixie's soul may have a charm until she becomes didactic. George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxiv.

water-nut (wá'tér-nut), n. The large edible seed of plants of the genus Trapa, or the plant itself: also called Singhara nut. See cut under Trapa.

water-nymph (wá'tér-nimf), n. 1. A Naiad.—2. A plant of the genus Najas.—3. The water-lily, Castalia (Nymphaea).

water-oak (wá'tér-ok), n. 1. In bot., an oak, Quercus aquatica, of the southern United States, most common and best developed along streams in the eastern Gulf States. Its wood is heavy, hard, and coarse-grained, and does not appear to be used except for fuel. Also duck-, possum-, or punk-oak.—2. Same as pin-oak.

water-oats (wá'tér-óts), n. pl. See Indian rice (a), under rice 1.

water-opossum (wá'tér-ō-pos'um), n. The South American yapok. See cut under yapok.

water-ordeal (wá'tér-ór'dē-al), n. See ordeal, 1.

water-organ (wá'tér-ór'gan), n. See hydraulic organ, under organ 1.

water-ouzel (wá'tér-ō'zəl), n. See ouzel.

water-oven (wá'tér-uv'n), n. In chem., an oven surrounded on all sides but the front or top with a chamber of boiling water or steam, used for drying chemical preparations, etc.

water-ox (wá'tér-oks), n.; pl. water-oxen (-oks'n). The water-cow.

Water-oxen turned up their noses at us. Little's Living Age, CLXI. 88.

water-padda (wá'tér-pad'á), n. A South African toad, Breviceps gibbosus.

water-pang (wá'tér-pang), n. Pyrosis.

water-parsley (wá'tér-párs'li), n. 1. One of several water-loving umbelliferous plants. [Eng.]—2. See Richardsonia.

water-paranip (wá'tér-párs'nip), n. A plant of the genus Sium, especially S. latifolium. See cut under skirret.

water-parting (wá'tér-pär'ting), n. Same as watershed.

The high land which forms the divisional line between two contiguous river-basins is called the water-parting. Instead of water-parting some writers employ the term watershed. Huxley, Physiology, p. 18.

water-partridge (wá'tér-pär'trij), n. The ruddy duck, Eristamora rubida. G. Trumbull, 1888. See cut under Eristamora. [Patuxent river, Maryland.]

water-passage (wá'tér-pas'áj), n. A passage for water; specifically, the urethra.

water-pennywort (wá'tér-pen'i-wért), n. Same as marsh-pennywort.

water-pepper (wá'tér-pep'ér), n. 1. The smartweed, Polygonum Hydropiper. The mild water-pepper is P. hydropiperoides.—2. Same as waterwort, 1.

water-persicaria (wá'tér-pér-si-ká'ri-á), n. See persicaria.

water-pewit (wá'tér-pé'wit), n. See pewit (c) and Sayornis.

water-pheasant (wá'tér-fez'ant), n. 1. The Chinese jaccana, Hydrophasianus chirurgus. See cut under Hydrophasianus.—2. The pintail or a congener duck, having a long tail. See pheasant (d) (5), and cut under Dafila.—3. The goosander, Mergus merganser; also, the hooded merganser, Lophodytes cucullatus.

waterphone (wá'tér-fón), n. [Irreg. < water + Gr. φωνή, voice, sound, simulating telephone.] An instrument for observing the flow of water in pipes and the detection of leaks, when the pipes are laid underground or in other inaccessible places. A common form consists of a metallic diaphragm arranged in an ear-trumpet after a manner analogous to a telephone receiver, and having a slender rod of steel connected with the diaphragm in such a way as not to touch the trumpet. In use the free end of the rod is placed upon the pipe to be examined, and the ear, placed at the trumpet, is thus enabled to hear distinctly sounds that, without this device, would be entirely inaudible.

water-piet (wá'tér-pi'et), n. The water-ouzel or dipper, Cinclus aquaticus. Also water-pyet. See cut under dipper. Montagu. [Prov. Eng.]

water-pig (wá'tér-pig), n. 1. A porpoise.—2. The capibara (which see, with cut).—3. A fish, the gourami.

water-pillar (wá'tér-pil'ár), n. 1. A water-spout.—2. On a railroad, an upright pipe with a swinging hollow arm or gooseneck, placed beside the track for supplying water to locomotives; a water-crane.

water-pimpernel (wá'tér-pim'pér-nel), n. See pimpernel.

water-pine (wá'tér-pín), n. See pine 1.

water-pipe (wá'tér-píp), n. [ME. water-pipe; < water + pipe.] 1. A pipe for conveying water. Wright, Vocabulary.

Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root Creeps to the garden water-pipes beneath, Feeding the flower. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. A waterspout. [Archaic.]

One deep calleth another, because of the noise of the water-pipes. Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. xlii. 9.

water-pipit (wá'tér-pip'it), n. One of several species of Anthus which are common in various parts of Europe, especially that usually called A. aquaticus, also A. spinoletta, and more correctly A. spinoletta. See Anthus and pipit.

waterpiti, n. [ME. waterpit; < AS. waterpyt; as water + pit.] A pit of water. Trevisa, III. 401.

water-pitcher (wá'tér-pich'ér), n. 1. A pitcher for holding water.—2. A plant of the order Sarraceniacæ, including the common pitcher-plant or sidesaddle-flower. See cut under pitcher-plant.

water-plane (wá'tér-plán), n. In ship-building, a plane passing through a vessel when afloat, on a level with the surface of the water. When the vessel has her stores and equipments only on board, such a plane is a light water-plane; when she is loaded, it is a load water-plane. Compare water-line.

water-plant (wá'tér-plant), n. A plant which grows in water; an aquatic plant.

water-plantain (wá'tér-plan'tán), n. A plant of the genus Alisma, chiefly A. Plantago, the common or great water-plantain, growing in shallow water throughout the temperate northern hemisphere, reappearing in Australia. Its leaves in form and arrangement suggest those of the common plantain, but are not ridged; the flowers are small and white petaled, borne in an open panicle a foot or two long. A smaller species is A. ranunculoides; a floating species, A. natans; both are European.

water-plate (wá'tér-plát), n. A plate having a double bottom or a lining of different material, with a space left in which hot water can be put, to keep articles of food warm.

This kind of dish [sentiment], above all, requires to be served up hot or sent off in water-plates, that your friend may have it almost as warm as yourself.

Lamb, Distant Correspondents.

water-platter (wá'tér-plat'tér), n. The royal water-lily, Victoria regia: so named with reference to its broad floating leaves with upturned margin.

water-plow (wá'tér-plou), n. A machine formerly used for taking mud, etc., out of rivers. Halliwell.

water-poise (wá'tér-poiz), n. A hydrometer, or instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of different liquids.

water-pore (wá'tér-pör), n. 1. In zool., the pore or orifice by which a water-tube of any water-vascular system opens to the exterior.—2. In bot., an aperture or pore in the epidermis of certain plants, through which water is frequently expressed. It resembles an ordinary stoma, but has no guardian-cells, and is situated directly over the extremities of the fibers of the framework. These apertures are of various size and form.

water-post (wá'tér-póst), n. A post (often a lamp-post) to which a pressure-gage is affixed, the gage being connected with the main and supply branches of a water-pipe, and serving to indicate the water-pressure in some part of a system of water-supply.

water-pot (wá'tér-pót), n. [< ME. water-pot, water-pott, watir-pot; < water + pot.] 1. Any pot or vessel for holding, conveying, or distributing water.

Therefor the woman lefte the water-pot and went into the cite. Wyclif, John iv. 28.

2. Same as watering-pot, 1.

To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and laying autumn's dust. Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 200.

3. A chamber-pot.

water-pouket, n. [< water + pouke, a pimple or blister, a little pouch or poke holding water; cf. poke², pouch.] Same as vesicle, 1 (b).

water-power (wá'tér-pou'ér), n. The power of water employed, or capable of being employed, as a prime mover in machinery; hence, a fall or descent in a stream capable of being utilized for mechanical purposes.

The water-power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream when in its natural state, as it passes through his land, or along the boundaries of it. Or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land and the surface where it leaves it.

Gibson, C. J., 3 Rawle (Penn.), p. 90.

Absorbent-strata water-power. See absorbent.

water-pox (wá'tér-poks), n. Varicella or chicken-pox.

water-press (wá'tér-pres), n. Same as hydrostatic or hydraulic press. See hydraulic. E. H. Knight.

water-prism (wá'tér-prizm), n. In a canal or river, the body of water at any part of its course as determined by the cross-section at that part, regarded as a cross-section of a prism.

The Yazoo river, by measurements, returned 129,000 cubic feet per second at the date of highest water at Vicksburg (June 27) to the water-prism.

Gov. Report on Mississippi River, 1861 (rep. 1870), p. 80.

water-privilege (wá'tér-priv'i-lej), n. 1. The right to use water; especially, the right to use running water to turn machinery. See water-power. — 2. A stream or body of water capable of being utilized in driving machinery. [U. S.] waterproof (wá'tér-prúf), a. and n. [Also water-proof; < water + proof, a.] 1. a. Impervious to water, or nearly so. — Waterproof glue. See glue.

II. n. 1. Any material which repels water; especially, a light woolen cloth made for the purpose, and subjected to some waterproofing application. — 2. A garment of some material that repels water, made either of waterproof (1), or of mackintosh or a similar material made with india-rubber.

"There is going to be rain, Sheila," her father said, smelling the moisture in the keen air. "Will you help your waterproof?" W. Black, Princess of Thule, xxvi.

Just as we reached it the mist turned to heavy rain. This is the depressing side of night-seeing in Scotland; you must take your holidays in water-proofs.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 945.

waterproof (wá'tér-prúf), v. t. [< waterproof, a.] To render impervious to water, as cloth, leather, etc.

Thirty yards of waterproofed and polished fly-line of braided silk. The Century, XXVI. 378.

waterproof (wá'tér-prúf), n. One who renders materials waterproof.

Waterproofers and lamp-black makers.

Lancet, 1890, I. 420.

waterproofing (wá'tér-prúf'ing), n. [Verbal n. of waterproof, v.] 1. The process or method of rendering impervious to water, as clothing, boots and shoes, and fishing-lines.

The final combination of dubbing, whitening, waterproofing, etc., it is claimed, gives the leather a superior finish. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 505.

2. The material with which a substance is made waterproof, as caoutchouc, a varnish, or an oil.

As umbrellas were not used by men, as being too effeminate, and india-rubber waterproofing was only to be discovered more than a century later, men in Anne's reign had to put their trust in good broadcloth cloaks.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 159.

water-propeller (wá'tér-prô-pel'ér), n. A rotary pump. E. H. Knight.

water-pump (wá'tér-pump), n. A pump for water: used humorously of the eyes.

"Thank you, Dobbin," he said, rubbing his eyes with his knuckles. . . . The water-pumps were at work again, and I am not sure that the soft-hearted Captain's eyes did not also twinkle. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxiv.

water-puppy (wá'tér-pup'í), n. Same as water-dog, 2.

water-purple (wá'tér-pér'pi), n. [< water + purple, a Sc. corruption of purple.] A species of Veronica, V. Beccabunga, found in moist places; brook-lime. [Scotch.] Creases or water-purple, and a bit alt-cake, can serve the Master for breakfast as well as Caled. Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xviii.

water-purslane (wá'tér-pérs'lân), n. See purslane.

water-pyret, n. See water-piet.

water-quaker (wá'tér-kwák), n. A violent disturbance of water. [Rare.]

Wittlemere . . . doth sometimes in Calmes and faire weather suddenly rise tempestuously, as it were, into violent water-quakes, to the danger of the poore fishermen. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 500. (Davies.)

water-qualm (wá'tér-kwäm), n. Pyrosis.

water-quenched (wá'tér-kwencht), a. Cooled by immersion in water: a term frequently used in speaking of tempering steel and similar operations.

water-quintain (wá'tér-kwin'tân), n. The sport of tilting at the quintain by a person standing in a boat, which was rowed rapidly past. If the tilter was not sufficiently alert, the return of the quintain threw him into the water.

water-rabbit (wá'tér-rab'it), n. The swamp-hare of the lower Mississippi valley, Lepus aquaticus. See cut under swamp-hare.

water-radish (wá'tér-rad'ish), n. A tall water-cress, Nasturtium amphibium, of wet places in the northern Old World. Other species of Nasturtium are also so named. Also radish.

water-rail (wá'tér-räl), n. 1. The common rail of Europe, Rallus aquaticus, as distinguished from land-rail, Crex pratensis; any species of Rallus. — 2. The European gallinule, Gallinula chloropus, the water-hen or moor-hen. [Local, Eng.] water-ram (wá'tér-ram), n. A machine for raising water: same as hydraulic ram (which see, under hydraulic).

water-ranny (wá'tér-ran'í), n. 1†. The short-tailed field-mouse. Halliwel. — 2. Properly, the water-shrew.

water-rat (wá'tér-rat), n. One of several different rodents, of aquatic habits, belonging to the family Muridæ. (a) In Europe, the water-vole, a comparatively large blackish species, Arvicola amphibius, which lives in the banks of streams or lakes. See vole. (b) In America, the musquash or muskrat, Fiber zibethicus. See cut under muskrat. (c) In Australia and Tasmania, a water-mouse; any species of the genus Hydromys, as H. chrysogaster or H. leucogaster; also called beaver-rat. See cut under beaver-rat.

water-rate (wá'tér-rät), n. A rate or tax for the supply of water. Also water-rent.

water-rattler (wá'tér-rat'lér), n. The diamond rattlesnake, Crotalus adamanteus, often found in moist places. Also water-rattle. [Local, U. S.] water-reed (wá'tér-réd), n. A grass of the genus Arundo.

water-rent (wá'tér-rent), n. Same as water-rate.

water-ret (wá'tér-ret), v. t. Same as water-rot.

water-retting (wá'tér-ret'ing), n. See retting, 1. Encyc. Brit., IX. 294.

water-rice (wá'tér-ris), n. The Indian rice, Zizania aquatica. See rice, and cut under Zizania.

water-robin (wá'tér-rôb'in), n. An Asiatic flycatcher, Xanthopygia fuliginosa. See robin, 3, and cut under Xanthopygia.

water-rocket (wá'tér-rôk'et), n. 1. A plant of the genus Nasturtium; water-cress. — 2. A kind of firework designed to be discharged in the water.

water-rot (wá'tér-rôt), v. t. To cause to rot by steeping in water, as in some of the mechanical trades. Also water-ret.

water-route (wá'tér-rôt), n. A stream or other tract of water used as a route of travel.

The competition of parallel railroad lines or water-routes. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 586.

water-rug (wá'tér-rug), n. [< water + rug, equiv. here to shock², shough.] A kind of dog. Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are clept All by the name of dogs. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 94.

water-sail (wá'tér-säl), n. A small sail occasionally set under a lower studdingsail.

water-salamander (wá'tér-sal'a-man-dér), n. A water-newt.

water-sallow (wá'tér-sal'ô), n. [< water + sal-low².] Same as water-willow, 1.

water-sapphire (wá'tér-saf'ir), n. A precious stone of an intense blue color and transparent, found in small rolled masses in Ceylon. It is a variety of iolite.

waterscape (wá'tér-skäp), n. [< water + -scape, as in landscape.] A water- or sea-view as distinguished from a landscape; a seascape. [Rare.] water-scorpion (wá'tér-skôr'pi-on), n. A large aquatic and carnivorous bug of the family Nepidae. See Nepa.

water-screw (wá'tér-skrô), n. A water-elevator consisting of an application of the Archimedean screw. It has spiral vanes set on an inclined axis revolving within a cylindrical casing whose lower end is in the water.

water-seal (wá'tér-sél), n. A body of water interposed as a bar to the passage or escape of gas. A common way of forming a water-seal is to insert the open mouth of a pipe or vessel designed to hold the gas below the surface of water in another vessel to a depth at which the hydraulic pressure opposing the escape of the gas is equal to or greater than the pneumatic pressure of the gas. Another method is to form a bend downward in a pipe, and fill the bent part with water. Compare trap, 4.

water-sengreen (wá'tér-sen'grën), n. See sengreen.

water-serpent (wá'tér-sér'pënt), n. Same as sea-serpent, 2.

watershed (wá'tér-shed), n. [< water + shed¹.] The edge of a river-basin (see river); the line separating the waters flowing into two different rivers or river-basins. Thus, the crest of the Sierra Nevada of California forms the watershed between the rivers flowing into the Pacific and those which lose themselves in the Great Basin. Sometimes called the water-parting, and in the United States more frequently and popularly the divide. Thus, the "Continental Divide" is the line which marks the separation of the waters flowing into the Pacific from those finding their way to the Gulf of Mexico.

Midnight! the outpost of advancing day! . . . The watershed of Time, from which the streams Of Yesterday and To-morrow take their way! Longfellow, The Two Rivers, I.

The summit of the pass is called the divide or watershed. In this last word the "shed" has not the present meaning, but an obsolescent one of "part" or "divide" (Ger. Scheiden). Skeat says: "The old sense 'to part' is nearly obsolete, except in water-shed, the ridge which parts river-systems. . . . The water-shed of any river basin limits its 'area of catchment,' as the hydraulic engineers call it. J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 141.

water-sheep (wá'tér-shép), n. The roach, a fish: so called in antithesis to water-fox (the carp). See cut under roach. J. Walton.

water-shell (wá'tér-shel), n. In ordnance, a shell, invented by M. Abel, consisting of an ordinary shell with a centrally placed cylinder of gun-cotton, having the space between this cylinder and the walls of the shell filled with water. The shell is hermetically sealed to retain the water.

water-shield (wá'tér-shêld), n. A plant of either of the genera Cabomba and Brasenia, which form the suborder Cabombæ, of the Nymphæaceæ: so called as consisting of aquatics with peltate leaves. Brasenia peltata, with floating oval leaves 1 to 4 inches across and small dull-purple flowers, is found in North America, Asia, Africa, and Australia. Also water-buckler.

water-shoot (wá'tér-shôt), n. [< water + shoot, prob. confused also with chute.] 1. A pipe or trough for discharging water from a building. — 2†. A shoot from the root of a tree.

water-shrew (wá'tér-shrô), n. An ear-footed aquatic shrew. In Europe the best-known species is Crotopus jodiæ. The corresponding American species is Neosorex palustris. See second cut under shrew.

water-shut (wá'tér-shut), n. That which stops the passage of water.

Water rat (Arvicola amphibius).

Who all the morns
Had from the quarry with his pick-axe torne
A large well-squared stone, which he would cut
To serve his stile, or for some water-shut.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals. (Nares.)

waterside (wá'tér-síd), n. The brink of water; the bank or margin of a river, stream, or lake; the sea-shore: sometimes used attributively.

Come, Master Belch, I will bring you to the water-side, perhaps to Wapping, and there I'll leave you.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, II. 1.

Water-side insects are well described, particularly the ephemerids.
The Academy, April 25, 1891, p. 392.

water-silvering (wá'tér-sil'vér-ing), n. A process of silvering analogous to water-gilding.

water-sink (wá'tér-singk), n. See pot-hole.

water-skin (wá'tér-skin), n. A vessel or bag of skin used for the storage or transportation of water.

We had water, it is true, from the Nile; but we never thought we could have too much, as long as there was room in our water-skins to hold more.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 177.

water-skipper (wá'tér-skip'ér), n. One of the slender long-legged water-bugs of the genus Hygrotrechus; any water-strider.

water-sky (wá'tér-ski), n. A peculiar reflection in the sky, common in arctic regions, indicating the presence of open water beneath.

Some circumstances which he reports seem to point to the existence of a north water all the year round; and the frequent water-skies, fogs, &c., that we have seen to the southwest during the winter go to confirm the fact.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 236.

water-slater (wá'tér-slá'tér), n. Any aquatic isopod or slater of the genus Asellus.

water-smartweed (wá'tér-smárt'wéd), n. See smartweed.

water-smoke (wá'tér-smök), n. Water evaporating in the visible form of fog or mist: a phenomenon that occurs when the temperature of water-surfaces is above the dew-point of the air, and the air is already saturated with moisture. Water-smoke is frequently observed over rivers or other bodies of water after a sudden fall of temperature, when, in popular language, it is said "the river steams," and in damp weather over water-covered surfaces, which are much warmer than the air, and is also seen frequently in arctic regions.

We had not been able to get the dogs out when the big moon appeared above the water-smoke.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., II. 32.

water-snail (wá'tér-snál), n. 1. An aquatic pulmonate gastropod; a pond-snail, as a limneid, or one of many similar snails. See cuts under Limnæa and Limnæidæ.—2. The Archimedean screw. [Rare.]

water-snake (wá'tér-snák), n. A snake which frequents the water: variously applied.

In the Friendly Islands the water-snake was much respected. . . . Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 179. Especially—(a) Any one of the venomous sea-snakes. See Hydrophidæ and sea-serpent, 2, with cuts there or there cited. (b) The Indian Fordonia unicolor, or any member of the family Homalopsidæ. (c) A wat-snake; any member of the Acrochordidæ, as species of Acrochordus and Chelydrius. See cut under water-snake. (d) The common ringed snake of Europe, Tropidonotus natrix. See cuts under snake and Tropidonotus. (e) In the United States, one of several harmless aquatic colubridæ, as the species of Nerodia (or Tropidonotus) and Iregina, as N. speedon and R. leberis. In the West several species of water-snakes (Eutania) are thoroughly aquatic, and would come locally under this name. See water-adder and water moccasin.

water-soak (wá'tér-sök), v. t. To soak or fill the interstices of with water.

water-socks (wá'tér-söks), n. pl. The white water-lily, Castalia speciosa. Britten and Holland.

water-sodden (wá'tér-sod'n), a. [< water + sodden, pp. of soothe.] Soaked and softened in water; water-soaked. Tennyson.

water-soldier (wá'tér-söl'jér), n. The water-sengreen, Stratiotes aloides. Also called water-aloe.

water-sorrel (wá'tér-sor'el), n. Same as water-dock.

water-souchy (wá'tér-sou'ebi), n. Fish boiled and served in its own liquor. See zouch, v. t.

water-space (wá'tér-späs), n. That part of a steam-boiler which lies below the steam-space, and is designed to hold the water to be evaporated.

water-spaniel (wá'tér-span'yel), n. The name given to two varieties of the dog called spaniel, namely, the large water-spaniel and the small water-spaniel. See spaniel, 1.

water-sparrow (wá'tér-spar'ō), n. 1. The reed-bunting or reed-sparrow, Emberiza schaniolus. [Prov. Eng.].—2. A reed- or sedge-warbler of the genus Acrocephalus, as A. streperus or A. phragmitis. [Prov. Eng.]

water-speedwell (wá'tér-spéd'wel), n. See speedwell.

water-spider (wá'tér-spi'dér), n. 1. A spider of the family Drassidæ, Argyroneta aquatica, which makes a bag of silk on water-plants, and lives in it under water as in a diving-bell, the opening being below, so that the air cannot escape. It is filled by the spider, which brings down bubbles of air one at a time. See diving-spider, and cut under Argyroneta.—2. Any one of certain spiders of the lycosid genus Dolomedes, as D. tenebrosus, D. urinator, or D. serpuncatus, which build nests of leaves and twigs on overhanging rushes, just at the surface of the water in shallow streams; a raft-spider. The spiders construct their cocoons and live in these nests. They run rapidly over and dive beneath the surface of the water, where they can remain for some time.

3. A water-mite or water-tick.—4. A bug of the genus Hydrometra; a water-measurer. Encyc. Diet.

water-spike (wá'tér-spik), n. A plant of the genus Potamogeton, which consists of aquatics with small greenish or reddish flowers in spikes or heads; pondweed.

water-spinner (wá'tér-spin'ér), n. A water-spider; especially, the diving spider.

waterspout (wá'tér-spout), n. 1. A pipe, nozzle, or orifice from which water is spouted.

The manner in which he gazed at the shops, stumbled into the gutters, ran against the porters, and stood under the waterspouts, marked him out as an excellent subject for the operations of swindlers and banterers.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., III.

Every dozen or fifteen miles is a station—two or three sheds, and a water-spout and woodpile.
S. Bowles, Our New West, p. 50.

2. A spout, jet, or column of water; specifically, a whirlwind over a body of water, producing the appearance of a solid column of water extending from the surface to the clouds. In reality, however, the phenomenon that is seen is the cloud brought down to the earth's surface by the rapid gyratory motion of a vertical whirl, and it consists simply of fine mist surrounding a central axis of rarefaction. At first the cloud has the form of a tapering funnel; then, descending to near the water's surface, it draws up the water for a distance into its vortex, and imparts to it its whirling motion. The spout is then complete, and appears as an immense column connecting sea and cloud, light in color near the center, but dark along the sides. Like other whirlwinds, the waterspout has a progressive as well as a rotary motion, its axis sometimes being inclined forward in the direction of advance. After continuing a short time, generally less than twenty minutes, the column is dissipated, the lower part descending as rain, while the upper part is drawn back into the clouds. The height of the spout depends upon the hygrometric state of the air; in general it is between 800 and 2,500 feet. It is common for a number of waterspouts to be seen simultaneously or successively; and this is to be expected, for a series of separate and independent gyrations are likely to arise when the air is in a state of instability, such as is required for the development of these whirlwinds. This is especially the case in tropical and equatorial regions, where waterspouts are most frequent.

Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts.
Ps. xlii. 7.

water-sprite (wá'tér-sprít), n. A sprite or spirit inhabiting the water.

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist!
And still it near'd and near'd;
As if it lodged a water-sprite,
It plunged and tack'd and veer'd.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, III.

water-stairs (wá'tér-stärz), n. pl. Stairs leading down to water, as on the banks of the Thames, where boats are taken for ferriage, etc.

He has but a tender weak body, but was always very temperate; . . . made him damnable drunk at Somers set-house, where, at the water-stairs, he fell down, and had a cruel fall.
Aubrey, Lives (Edmund Waller).

water-standing (wá'tér-stan'ding), a. Wet with water; perpetually filled with tears. [Rare.]

An orphan's water-standing eye.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 6. 40.

water-star (wá'tér-stiir), n. Same as star-fruit.

water-stargrass (wá'tér-stiir'gräs), n. An aquatic herb, Heteranthera (Schollera) graminea, with grass-like leaves and yellow starry flowers.

water-starwort (wá'tér-stiir'wört), n. See Callitriche and star-grass.

waterstead (wá'tér-sted), n. The bed of a river. Admiral Smyth.

water-stream (wá'tér-strēm), n. [< ME. water-stream, < AS. water-strēm; as water + stream.] A stream of water; a river.

Fort all all swa se waterstrēm . . . fletethth forth . . . toward to see.
Ormulum (ed. White), I. 12902.

water-strider (wá'tér-strí'dér), n. Any aquatic heteropterous insect of the family Hydro- batidæ; a water-skipper: so called from their long, slender, straddling legs and aquatic habits.

The water-striders prefer quiet waters, upon which they rest, or over which they skim rapidly.

Comstock, Introduct. Entom. (1888), p. 198.

water-supply (wá'tér-su-pli'), n. The obtaining of water for and its distribution to a town or city, as far as possible in sufficient quantity and of satisfactory quality; also, the amount of water thus provided and distributed.

Water-supply, as this term is generally used, differs from irrigation in that the latter has to do with providing and distributing water for agricultural purposes—that is, it is an attempt to make up for a deficiency of, or for irregularity in, the natural rainfall. Water-supply, on the other hand, is the providing of water for domestic and manufacturing uses in sufficient quantity, and under favorable conditions, not only as to purity, but also as to pressure, so that it may be available without the necessity of carrying it by hand to the upper stories of houses or manufactories, and as to storage, so that large quantities can be used within a short period of time, as when needed for extinguishing extensive conflagrations in cities. The question of water-supply is one which has to do, and to a most important extent, with the health, comfort, and material well-being of all localities, even where there is only a moderately dense aggregation of population; and the larger and denser such aggregation the more important this question becomes. The natural source of water-supply is the rain, and this is one of great importance in regions of considerable rainfall and of thinly aggregated population, the water being caught on the roofs of the houses or barns and conveyed to cisterns where it is stored for use as wanted, and from which it has to be pumped. Almost everywhere in regions of considerable precipitation water can be had by digging shallow wells in the surface detritus, and this is an extremely common mode of supply in agricultural districts, the advantage being that the expense of digging a well is much less than that of providing storage in cisterns, while the disadvantage is that well-water is ordinarily not so pure as rain-water (and this is emphatically the case in limestone districts). Besides, it is almost impossible to provide cisterns large enough to hold the amount of rain-water required during periods of abnormally long drought, such as occasionally occur even in regions of considerable average rainfall. These sources of supply—namely, rain caught as it falls and water from shallow wells—are entirely unsuited to the conditions in towns of even moderate size. The rainfall in cities is contaminated with soot and gases thrown out from the many chimneys of houses and manufacturing establishments; neither is it large enough in quantity, nor can it be stored satisfactorily without incurring an expense far greater than would be that of providing a supply in some other way. Rivers would seem to be the natural source of supply for cities situated upon them, and there are few very large cities through which a river does not run; but rivers are the natural and almost necessary sewers of the cities drained by them, and the water, thus polluted, is not only often disagreeable to the taste, but is always a possible source of danger to health. It is true that some cities of moderate size situated on very large rivers do use their water, as, for instance, St. Louis on the Mississippi; but, in general, if a river is used, the water must be taken from a point high enough up-stream to avoid the risk of contamination from the sewage of the towns situated on or near its banks, as is done in London, which is largely supplied by water from the Thames drawn from a point far above the city. The most satisfactory source of water-supply for a city is a mountain-lake, not too far distant, where the geological and other conditions are such as to insure a high degree of purity in the water. This is emphatically the case with regard to Glasgow, which is supplied from Loch Katrine. Much better water satisfactory in quality and abundant in quantity can be obtained by creating one or more artificial lakes at the head of a suitably situated river by the construction of dams; these are sometimes of great height, holding back bodies of water miles in length. Of this character is the water-supply of Liverpool, of New York, of Boston, and of many other important cities. Regions underlain by thick masses of permeable rocks—as, for instance, the New Red Sandstone and Chalk districts of England—are not infrequently supplied with water by means of wells bored to considerable depths and of large dimensions, from which the water sometimes rises to the surface, but more often has to be pumped. Many large towns in the manufacturing districts of England were formerly almost exclusively, and are still to some extent, supplied in this way; but wherever it has been found possible to obtain water in some better way this system has been abandoned, neither quality nor quantity being satisfactory. Considerable water is procured in England from deep wells in the Chalk, and this method of supply is of some importance in London. Where the conditions are such that pure water cannot be had, artificial purification is sometimes resorted to, but this is always expensive and often unsatisfactory. An abundant supply of soft water, taken from some source known to be free from the possibility of contamination by sewage or otherwise, is one of the greatest of blessings, and this result has been attained in various cities, but not without large expenditure and no small amount of engineering skill. The distribution of water was once a matter of considerable difficulty, the wooden pipes first employed being subject to rot and leakage. In modern times the use of cast-iron for the mains is most common, while the service-pipes are usually of lead or galvanized iron, but sometimes of bronze or brass.

water-swallow (wá'tér-swol'ō), n. The water-wagtail. Hallivell.

water-system (wá'tér-sis'tem), n. In zool., the water-vascular system.

water-tabby (wá'tér-tab'i), n. Tabby having a watered surface.

water-table (wá'tér-tā'bl), n. 1. In arch., a string-course, molding, or other projecting member so placed as to throw off water from the wall of a building.

It should not be forgotten what a noble foundation there was for the chapel, which did runne from the Colledge along the street as far as the Blew Boare Inn; which was about 7 foot or more high, and adorned with a very rich Gothique water-table.

Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Wolsey).

2. A small embankment made across a road, especially on a hill, to carry off the water. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. Same as water-bridge.

water-tank (wá'tér-tangk), n. A tank, cistern, or other receiver for holding water.

The sensitizing bath, plate-holders, water-tanks, etc., all adjusted. Silver Sunbeam, p. 128.

water-tap (wá'tér-tap), n. A tap or cock by which water may be drawn from any supply.

water-target (wá'tér-tár'get), n. The water-shield, Brasenia peltata.

water-tath (wá'tér-tath), n. A species of coarse grass growing in wet grounds, and supposed to be injurious to sheep. [Prov. Eng.]

water-telescope (wá'tér-tel'e-skóp), n. See telescope.

water-thermometer (wá'tér-thér-mom'e-tér), n. An instrument, in which water is substituted for mercury, for exhibiting the precise degree of temperature at which water attains its maximum density. This is at 39° 2 F. or 4° C., and from that point downward to the freezing-point, 32° F. or 0° C., it expands, and it also expands from the same point upward to the boiling-point, 212° F. or 100° C. See water.

water-thief (wá'tér-théf), n. 1. A pirate. [Rare.]

Water-thieves and land-thieves; I mean pirates. Shak, M. of V., l. 3. 24.

2. A slender cylindrical tin can, 9 or 10 inches long and from 1½ to 2 inches thick, furnished with a bail, used to draw water from a cask through the bung-hole; a bung-bucket: so called because it is sometimes used by sailors to steal water when on short allowance.

water-thistle (wá'tér-this-1), n. The marsh-thistle, Carduus palustris, of the northern Old World. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-thrush (wá'tér-thrush), n. 1. A bird of the genus Scirurus, as S. naevius or S. motacilla, common in the United States, and belonging to the American warblers, or Mniotiltidae. S. naevius is more fully called New York water-thrush, and S. motacilla the large-billed or Louisiana water-thrush. The name may have originally contrasted with wood-thrush, but this bird belongs to a different family. The nearest relative of these water-thrushes is a woodland species of the same genus, S. auricapillus, the golden-crowned thrush (figured under oven-bird), from which the two species named above differ markedly in inhabiting watery tangles and brakes. Also called water-wagtail. See cut under Scirurus.

2. Any bird of the family Pittidae; an Old World ant-thrush. See cut under Pittidae.

3. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—4. Same as water-wagtail, 1. [Local, Eng.]

water-thyme (wá'tér-tím), n. See thyme.

water-tick (wá'tér-tik), n. A water-spider of the genus Hydrometra.

water-tiger (wá'tér-tí'gér), n. The larva of any water-beetle of the family Dytiscidae. See cut under decapodiform.

The larvae are called water tigers, being long, cylindrical, with large flattened heads, armed with scissor-like jaws with which they seize other insects, or snip off the tails of tadpoles, while they are even known to attack young fishes, sucking their blood.

A. S. Packard, Guide to the Study of Insects, p. 436.

water-tight (wá'tér-tít), a. [= G. wasserdicht; as water + tíht.] So tight as to resist the passage of water; impenetrable by water.—Water-tight compartment. See compartment, and compare cut under dock.

water-tightness (wá'tér-tít'nes), n. The property of being water-tight. The Engineer, LXIX. 148.

water-torch (wá'tér-tórch), n. The reed-mace or cattail, Typha latifolia: said to be so named from its fruiting spike being soaked in oil and lighted as a torch. Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants.

water-tower (wá'tér-tou'ér), n. Same as stand-pipe, 7.

When the flames are blazing through the upper windows of a tall building . . . the value of what is called a water-tower is apparent. Scribner's Mag., IX. 56.

water-treader (wá'tér-tred'ér), n. One who or that which treads water; hence, by poetical license, a ship.

When the water-treader far away
Had left the land, then plotted they the day
Of my long servitude. Chapman, Odyssey, xiv. 477.

water-tree (wá'tér-tré), n. See Tetracera.

Red water-tree, the assy-bark. See Erythrophloeum.

water-trefoil (wá'tér-tré'foil), n. Same as bog-bean.

water-trunk (wá'tér-trungk), n. A cistern of planks lined with lead to hold water. Simmonds.

water-tube (wá'tér-tüb), n. 1. A pipe for rain-water.—2. One of a set of tubes which open upon the exterior of various invertebrates, and into which water may enter. They are supposed to have an excretory or a depuratory office analogous to that of kidneys. See water-pore, 1, water-vascular, and compare water-lung.—Water-tube boiler, a form of boiler in which the water circulates through pipes, and the flame wraps about them.

water-tupelo (wá'tér-tü'pe-lō), n. A form (Nyssa aquatica) of the black-gum or pepperidge, Nyssa sylvatica, having the base of the trunk greatly enlarged or swollen, found in ponds and swamps in the southern United States.

water-turkey (wá'tér-tér'ki), n. 1. The aninga or snake-bird, Plotus aninga. See darter, 3 (b) (1), and cut under aninga. [Southern U. S.]—2. The wood-ibis, Tantalus loculator: more fully called Colorado water-turkey. See wood-ibis, and cut under Tantalus. [Southwestern U. S.]

water-twist (wá'tér-twist), n. The trade-name for cotton yarn spun on a water-frame. See water-frame.

water-twyer (wá'tér-twi'ér), n. In metal, a furnace blast-pipe or twyer kept cool (to prevent the burning of the nozzle) by means of a stream of water constantly passing through a pipe carried around or beside it.

water-vacuole (wá'tér-vak'ü-öl), n. One of the temporary vacuoles of many protozoans, consisting of a globule of water taken in with a particle of food. The circulation of these food-vacuoles or temporary stomachs represents a water-vascular system of the most primitive kind. See water-vascular.

water-varnish (wá'tér-vär'nish), n. A varnish made by using water as a solvent.—Lac water-varnish. See lac.²

water-vascular (wá'tér-vas'kü-lär), a. In biol., pertaining to or providing for circulation of water in the body of an animal. The water-vascular system is seen in its utmost simplicity in infusorians, and in various degrees of complexity in higher invertebrates.

tebrates—in trematode worms, for example. Water-lungs and water-tubes belong to the water-vascular system. See also cut under Balanoglossus, Proctucha, Rhabdocarla, and Rotifera.

water-vine (wá'tér-vín), n. 1. A plant of the genus Phytocrene.—2. A climbing shrub, Dolichopus Calinea of the Dilleniaceae, found in tropical America. [West Indies.]

water-violet (wá'tér-ví'ó-let), n. (a) A plant of the genus Hottonia, primarily H. palustris: so called from the likeness of its flowers to those of the stock-gillyflower, once called violet. Britten and Holland. See featherfoil. (b) Sometimes, same as lance-leaved violet (which see, under violet).

water-viper (wá'tér-ví'pér), n. See viper.

water-vole (wá'tér-völ), n. The common water-rat or vole of Europe, Arvicola amphibius. See cut under water-rat.

The sudden dive of a water-vole.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

water-wagtail (wá'tér-wag'täl), n. 1. A wagtail most properly so called; any species of Motacilla in a strict sense, as distinguished from Budytes. In England the name commonly specifies the pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris. See cut under wagtail.—2. Same as water-thrush, 1.—Gray water-wagtail, yellow water-wagtail. Same as gray wagtail (which see, under wagtail).

waterway (wá'tér-wä), n. [< ME. water-wey, < AS. wæterweg; as water + wey.] 1. A channel or passage of water; a water-route; specifically, that part of a river, arm of the sea, or the like through which vessels enter or depart; the fairway.

Though the Thames was already a waterway by which London could communicate with the heart of England, no town save Oxford has as yet arisen along its course.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 419.

2. In ship-building, a name given to the thick planks at the outside of the deck, worked over the ends of the beams, and fitting against the inside of the top-timbers, to which, as well as to the ends of the beams, they are bolted, thus forming an important binding. Their inner edge is hollowed out to form a channel for water to run off the deck. In iron vessels the waterway assumes many different forms. See cut under beam, 2 (g).

The spencers we bent on very carefully, . . . and making tackles fast to the clews, bowed them down to the water-ways. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 258.

The Waterway, as its name would suggest, is a portion of the hull so situated that, in addition to its other functions, it forms a channel for carrying water to the scuppers on each side of the ship. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 209.

water-weak (wá'tér-wék), a. Weak as water; very feeble or weak.

If merrie now, anone with woe I weepe,
If lustie now, forthwith am water-weak.

Davies, Muse's Sacrifice, p. 10. (Davies.)

water-weed (wá'tér-wéd), n. 1. Any wild aquatic plant without special use or beauty.

The willful water-weeds held me thrall.

S. Lanier, The Century, XXVII. 819.

2. Specifically, the choke-pondweed or water-thyme, Elodea Canadensis (Anacharis Alsinastrium), of the Hydrocharidaceae. See pondweed and Babington's curse.

water-weevil (wá'tér-wé'vl), n. A snout-beetle, Lissorhoptrus simplex, which occurs in great numbers in the Georgia and South Carolina rice-fields, the adult feeding on the leaves of the rice, and the larvæ feeding on the roots under water.

Water-weevil (Lissorhoptrus simplex), eight times natural size.

This beetle has gained its common name of water weevil from the fact that it is found only when the fields are overflowed.

L. O. Howard, U. S. Agricultural Report, 1881-2, p. 131.

water-wheel (wá'tér-hwél), n. In hydraul.:

(a) A wheel moved by water, and employed to turn machinery. There are four principal kinds of water-wheels—the overshot wheel, the undershot wheel, the breast-wheel, and the turbine. (b) A wheel for raising water in large quantities, as the Persian wheel. See wheel.¹ (c) The paddle-wheel of a steamer.—Bottom-discharge water-wheel. See bottom.—Lift water-wheel. (a) An undershot wheel. (b) A water-wheel the gudgeons and bearings of which may be raised or lowered to adapt the wheel to various heights of water-supply. E. H. Knight.—Radial-piston water-wheel, a form of breast-wheel having movable floats which extend radially outward to the breasting on the water side of the wheel to receive the pressure of the water during its descent, and are drawn inward as they rise on the opposite side of the wheel.—Water-wheel gate, a water-gate for controlling the quantity of water admitted to a wheel, according to the power required. See cut under scroll.—Water-wheel governor, a mechanism employed to produce uniformity of motion in a water-wheel.

water-white (wá'tér-hwít), a. Perfectly transparent, as water; limpid and colorless. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 646.

water-whorlgrass (wá'tér-hwér'l'grás), n. Same as water-hairgrass.

water-willow (wá'tér-wil'ō), n. 1. A European willow, sometimes named Salix aquatica, forming a variety of the common willow, S. Caprea, or if distinct, S. cinerea.—2. An American acanthaceous plant, Dianthera Americana, an herb 3 feet high, of willow-like aspect, growing in water, having purplish flowers in axillary peduncled spikes.

water-wing (wá'tér-wing), n. A wall erected on the bank of a river adjoining a bridge, to secure the foundations from the action of the current.

waterwitch (wá'tér-wich), n. 1. A witch who dwells in the water; a water-nixy.—2. A person who pretends to have the power of discovering subterranean springs by means of a divining-rod. Bartlett, Americanisms, p. 741.—3. One of several water-birds noted for their quickness in diving, as a kind of duck, the buff-headed duck, Clangula or Bucephala albeola, and especially various species of grebes or didappers, as the horned grebe, Podiceps cornu- tus, or the pied-billed dabchick, Podilymbus podiceps. See cuts under buffle, grebe, and Tachydactylus.—4. The stormy petrel, or Mother Carey's chicken. See cut under petrel.

water-witthe (wá'tér-wíth), n. A species of vine, Vitis Caribæa, which grows in the West Indies in parched districts. It is so full of clear sap or water that a piece of the stem two or three yards long is said to afford a plentiful draught.

water-wood (wá'tér-wúd), n. A large rubaceous tree, Chimarrhis cymosa, of river-banks in the West Indies.

water-work (wá'tér-wérk), n. 1. A structure, contrivance, or engine for conducting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of water: now commonly in the plural. Specifically—(a) An edifice with machinery constructed in London in 1594–5 for forcing up and conveying the water of the Thames to various parts of the city.

Titus, the brave and valorous young gallant,
Three years together in the town hath been,
Yet my Lord Chancellor's tomb he hath not seen,
Nor the new waterwork.

Sir J. Davies (?), Epigrams (1590), vi., In Titum.

Mam. Shall serve the whole city with preservative Weekly; each house his dose, and, at the rate—
Sur. As he that built the waterwork doth with water.

B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

(b) [In plural form, as sing. or pl.] The aggregate of constructions and appliances for the collection, preservation, and distribution of water for domestic purposes, for the working of machinery, or otherwise for the use of a community. (c) An appliance through which water is spouted out in jets, sprays, or showers; a fountain; a hydraulic toy.

Some [gardens] are beautified with basins of water in open pavilions, or with fountains and little water works, in which, and their pleasant summer houses, their chief beauty consists. Pocock, Description of the East, II. i. 123.

(c) pl. Same as tear-pump. [Humorous slang.]

Sneaking little brute, . . . clapping on the waterworks just in the hardest place.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 5.

2†. A marine scene or pageant.

The first scene is a water-work presented by Oceanus, king of the sea.
Dekker, Londons Tempe (Works, ed. Pearson, IV. 118).

[In the following quotation the word is used punningly, with reference to the freezing over of the Thames during the winter of 1607–8.]

Coun. Make me so much beholding to you as to receive from you the right picture of all these your water works. . . .
Cit. The Thames began to put on his "freeze-coat," which he yet wears, about the week before Christmas; and hath kept it on till now this latter end of January.

The Great Frost (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 88.)

3†. Painting with water or something soluble in water as a vehicle.—4. Hence, a textile fabric, as canvas, painted in this manner, and used instead of tapestry to decorate apartments.

The king for himself had a house of timber, . . . and for his other lodgings he had great and goodlie tents of blew water-work, garnished with yellow and white.
Holinshead, Chronicle, III. 819.

For thy walls, a pretty slight drollery, . . . or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 158.

water-worker (wá'tér-wér'kér), n. One whose work has to do with water; in provincial English use, a maker of meadow-drains and wet ditches. Halliwel.

water-worm (wá'tér-wörn), n. A water annelid, as a nauid.

water-worn (wá'tér-wörn), a. Worn by the action of water; especially, smoothed by the force or action of running water, or water in motion: as, water-worn pebbles.

waterwort (wá'tér-wért), n. 1. A plant of the genus Elatine, or more broadly of the order Elatinaceæ, primarily E. Hydropiper of the Old World.—2. The plant Philydrium lanuginosum, or (Lindley) any plant of the order Phylodraceæ.

water-wraith (wá'tér-ráth), n. A supposed water-spirit, whose appearance prognosticates death or woe to the person seeing it.

By this the storm grew loud apace;
The water-wraith was shrieking.
Campbell, Lord Ullin's Daughter.

watery (wá'tér-i), a. [< ME. watery, wateri, watry, watri, < AS. waterig (= D. waterig = MHG. weszeric, wazzeric, G. wässerig), < water, water: see water.] 1. Abounding in, moist with, or containing water; discharging water; wet; dripping; watered; specifically, of the eyes, tearful or running.

"After sharpe shoures," quod Fees, "moste shene is the sonne;
Is no weder warmer than after watery cloudea."
Piers Plowman (B), xviii. 410.

This lady
Walks discontented, with her watery eyes
Bent on the earth.

Beau. and Fl., Mals's Tragedy, i. 1.

2. Consisting of water.

The queen o' the sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am I [Iris].
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 71.

Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
Letho, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth. Milton, P. L., II. 584.

3. Resembling water; suggestive of water.

(a) Thin, as a liquid; of slight consistency.
Nowe this vynes, whose taketh kepe,
Not watery but thicke humours wepe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 104.

Hence—(b) Weak; vapid; insipid.
The heorte, that was watery, smeeches, and no neede no saunor of God.
Slight Sir Robert with his watery smile.
Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

(c) Liquid; soft, and more or less transparent; pale.
The chasm in which the sun has sunk is shut, . . .
And over it a space of watery blue,
Which the keen evening star is shining through.
Shelley, Evening.

Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, apace
Travel along the precipice's base.
Wordsworth, Evening Walk.

(d) Insipid and soft or flabby, as a fish or its flesh.
4. Pertaining to, connected with, or affecting water: specifically used of the moon, as governing the tide.

Whiles winter frets the seas, and wat'ry Orion.
Surrey, Aeneid, iv. 67.

All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
May send forth plentiful tears to drown the world!
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 60.

The watery god
Roll'd from a silver urn his crystal flood Dryden.

5†. Watering in desire, as the mouth; eager.

What will it be,
When that the watery palate tastes indeed Love's thrice repured nectar?
Shak., T. and C., iii. 2. 22.

6. In her.: (a) Bounded by, or ornamented by, wavy lines: a rare epithet used in blazoning fanciful modern bearings. (b) Same as undé.

[Rare.]—The watery start. See start.—Watery fusion. See aqueous fusion, under fusion.—Watery itch, scabies attended with the formation of vesicles.

water-yam (wá'tér-yám), n. The latticeleaf; either of the plants Apocyneton (Ouvirandra) fenestralis and A. (O.) Bernieriana: so called from its aquatic growth and farinaceous rootstock. See latticeleaf and Ouvirandra.

water-yarrow (wá'tér-yár'ō), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris: so called from its leaves being finely divided like those of yarrow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

wath, n. [< Icel. vadh = Sw. vad, a ford: see vade, n.] A ford. Halliwel.

wathe¹, n. [< ME. wahte (also, after Icel., waith, wayth), < AS. wāth, wāth, hunting, game, = OHG. wada, MHG. G. wende, pasture, meadow, = Icel. veithr, hunting, fishing. Cf. gain.] 1. The pursuit of game; hunting.

"So, we ar in wudlond," cotlie the king, "and walkes on owre wayth, For to hunte atte the herd, with hounde and with horne."
Authors of Arthur (ed. Robson), xxiv.

2. Game; prey.

Before alle the folk on the flette, frekez he bedder Verayly his venysoun to fech hym bylorne; . . .
"go I-wysse," quoth that other wyge, "here is wayth fayrest"

That I seþ this seven gere in reson of wynter."
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), I. 1381.

God send you som wathe!
Now ar thise fowles flone into seyr cowntre.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 33.

wathe², n. [< ME. wahte, wothe, < Icel. vadhi, danger, injury.] Peril; harm; danger.

Trwe mon trwe restore,
Thenne thar [need] mon drede no wathe.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), I. 2355.
Ho vnwoundit, I-wis, out of wothe paste.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 10606.

wathely, adv. [ME., < *wathe*² + -ly.] Dangerously; severely.

Ector done was to dethe, & his day past,
Achilles woundit full wathely in were of his lyffe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 8827.
Wroghte wayes fulle wyde, werraynde knyghtez,
And woundes alle wathely, that in the wyne stondez!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 2000.

Watling street. [< ME. Watlunge-strete, < AS. Wætlinga stræt, lit. the Wætlings' street: Wætlinga, gen. pl. of Wætlung, a descendant of Wælla (< Wælla, a man's name, + -ing); stræt, a road, street.] 1. A celebrated Roman road leading from London (and possibly from Dover) northward across Britain. Hence—2†. The Milky Way, the ordinary name of which implies that it is a road.

Se yonder, lo, the Galaxy,
The which men clepe the Milky Weye,
For hit ys white; and somme, parfeye,
Callen hit Watlynge strete.
Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 939.

watt (wot), n. [So called from the Scottish engineer and inventor James Watt (1736–1819).] The practical unit of electrical activity or power. The watt is equal to 10⁷ ergs per second, or the same number of absolute c. g. s. units of electrical activity; or it is the rate of working in a circuit when the E. M. F. is one volt and the current one ampere. One horse-power is equal to 746 watts.

watter, n. See *wat*³.

Watteau back. In dressmaking, an arrangement of the back of a woman's dress in which broad folds or plaits hang from the neck to the bottom of the skirt without interruption; by extension, any loose back to a dress, not girded at the waist. See cut under sack.

Watteau bodice. A bodice of a woman's dress having a square opening at the neck, and presenting some resemblance to the costumes in the paintings by the artist Watteau (beginning of the eighteenth century).

Watteau mantle. See mantle.

wattle (wot'l), n. [Also dial. waddle; < ME. watel, < AS. watel, watul, a hurdle, in pl. twigs, thatching, tiles; cf. Bav. wadel, twigs, fir-branches, Swiss wedele, a bundle of twigs; perhaps akin to withy, weed. Cf. wallet.] 1. A framework made of interwoven rods or twigs; a hurdle. See hurdle.

The walls are wattles, and the covering leaves.

Scott, The Poacher.

They are gallant hares, and the scent lies thick right across another meadow, . . . and then over a good wattle with a ditch on the other side.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, I. 7.

2. A rod; a wand; a switch; a twig.

A Wattle, rod, vibex.

Levinus, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

Nae whip nor spur, but just a wattle
O' saugh or hazel.

Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

3†. A basket; a bag or wallet. Piers Plowman (C), xi. 269.—4. In ornith., a fleshy lobe hanging from the front of the head; specifically, such a lobe of the domestic hen, or a like formation of any bird. Wattles most properly so called are paired, as in the hen, but may be single, as the dewlap of the turkey. They are very various in size, shape, and color, but are usually pendent, and of some bright tint, as red, yellow, or blue. They occur in several different orders of birds, and among species whose near relatives are devoid of such appendages. Similar lobes or flaps on the auriculars are sometimes called ear-wattles, though more properly ear-lobes. See wattle-bird, wattle-crow, phrases under wattle, and cuts under Gallus and Raoures.

The combs or wattles (of young gamecocks) are to be cut as soon as they appear; and the cock chickens are to be separated as soon as they begin to peck each other.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 302.

5. A flap of skin forming a sort of dewlap on each side of the neck of some domestic swine.

Ye Wattle of a hog, nenus.

Levinus, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

Goitrons. Wattles, or wattles, the two little and long excrescences which hang teat-like at either side of the throat of some hogs.

Cotgrave, 1611.

6. In ichth., a fleshy excrescence about the mouth; a barbel.

The Barbel is so called, says Gesner, by reason of his barb or wattles at his mouth, which are under his nose or chaps.

J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 166.

7. One of various Australian and Tasmanian acacias, valued to some extent for their wood and for their gum, but more for their bark, which is rich in tannin. For tannin the most important species are Acacia decurrens, or (if it is distinct from this, as appears to be the case) A. mollissima, the common black wattle, also called green or feathered wattle, and A. pyramidalis, the broad-leaved or golden wattle. The silver wattle, A. dealbata, closely allied to the black wattle, is distinguished by the ashen color of its young foliage, and is a taller tree of moister ground. Its bark is inferior, but is considerably used for lighter leathers. Other species yielding tan-bark are A. saligna (A. leiophylla), the blackwood or lightwood, A. melanocylon, the native hickory (A. subporosa), A. pennicernis, etc. Several wattles yield a gum resembling gum arabic, somewhat exported for use in cotton-printing as an adhesive, etc. The principal sources of this product are the black wattle, the broad-leaved wattle, and A. homalophylla.

8. In her., a wattle or dewlap used in a bearing. Compare wattled.—African wattle, a South African tree, Acacia Natalitia.—Alpine wattle, Acacia praecoxima, a shrub or small tree of the Victorian Alps.—Black wattle, feathered wattle, golden wattle, green wattle. See def. 7.—Prickly wattle, Acacia juniperina, an evergreen shrub of Australia and Tasmania.—Raspberry-jam wattle. Same as raspberry-jam tree.—Savannah wattle, two West Indian verbaceous trees, Citharexylum quadrangulare and C. cinerea.—Silver wattle. See def. 7.—Soap-pod wattle. Same as soapnut. 2.—Varnish-wattle, the Australian Acacia verniciflua.—Wallaby wattle, an Australian shrub, Acacia rigens.—Wattle and daub, a rough mode of building huts, cottages, etc., of interwoven twigs plastered with mud or clay: often used attributively: as, wattle-and-daub construction. Also wattle and dab.

Melbourne in those days was a straggling village, where the fathers of the settlement were content with slab shanties, or wattle-and-daub huts.

wattle (wot'1), v. t.; pret. and pp. wattled, ppr. wattling. [Early mod. E. also watte; < ME. watelen, watten; < wattle, n.] 1. To bind, wall, fence, or otherwise fit with wattles.

And ther-with Grace by-gan to make a good foundement, And watelde hit and wallyde hit with hus peynes and hus passion.

Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 328.

Smoke was seen to arise within a shed yt was joynd to ye end of ye storehouse, which was watted up with bowes.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 152.

2. To form by interweaving twigs or branches: as, to wattle a fence.

The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled votes.

Milton, Comus, l. 344.

And round them still the wattled hurdles hung.

M. Arnold, Balder Dead, ii.

3. To interweave; interlace; form into basket-work or network.

A night of Clouds muffled their brows about,

Their wattled locks gush all in Ruiners out.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 2.

The roof was a thatch composed of white-birch twigs, sweet-flag, and straw wattled together.

S. Judd, Margaret, l. 3.

4. To switch; beat. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

wattle-bark (wot'1-bärk), n. A bark used for tanning, obtained from several species of Acacia growing in Australia. See wattle, 7.

wattle-bird (wot'1-bërd), n. 1. The Australian wattled or warty-faced honey-eater, Anthochaera carunculata: formerly also called wat-

Wattle-bird (Anthochaera carunculata)

tled bee-eater and wattled crow by Latham, and pie à pendeloques by Dauidin. Among its former New Latin names are Merope or Corvus carunculatus, Creadion carunculatum, and Corvus paradoxus. It inhabits Australia, and has ear-wattles about half an inch long. In a related species of Tasmania, A. inauris, the wattles are more than an inch long. The plumage is variegated with gray, brown, and white. Several other moliphaquine birds are also wattled.

2. A wattle-crow, Glaucopsis cinerea, the cinereous wattle-bird of Latham.—3. A wattle-turkey.

wattle-crow (wot'1-krô), n. Any bird of the group Glaucopinae or Callaeinae: a wattled tree-crow; originally and specifically, the cinereous wat-

Wattle crow (Glaucopsis cinerea).

tle-bird, Glaucopsis cinerea, of the South Island of New Zealand. The wattles are rich-orange, blue at the base; the bill and feet are black; the eyes are dark-brown; the plumage is slate-gray, black on the face and tip of the tail; the length of the male is 16½ inches, of the female 15 inches; the sexes are alike in color. A second species, G. wilsoni, of the North Island, has blue wattles. wattled (wot'1d), a. [*< wattle + -ed*².] Having a wattle or wattles, as a bird; specifically, in her., noting a cock's head, and the like, when the wattles are of a different tincture from the rest: generally used in the expression wattled and combed. Also jewellapped, jelloped, and barbed.

The wattled cocks strut to and fro.

Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

Wattled bee-eater. Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham.—Wattled bird of paradise, Paradisgalla carunculata of New Guinea. This has two pairs of wattles, one on each side of the forehead, of a yellowish-green color, and another at the base of the mandible on each side, of a blue and orange color. The male is 11 inches long, and mostly of a velvety-black color with various iridescence. —Wattled creeper of Latham, Psittotis carunculata, a moliphaquine bird of the Samoan, Friendly, and Fiji islands, chiefly of olivaceous, yellowish, and grayish coloration. See Psittotis.—Wattled crow. (a) Any wattle-crow. (b) Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham.—Wattled honey-eater. Same as wattle-bird, 1.—Wattled plover, any spur-winged plover of the genus Lobrevanellus, as L. lobatus, having the face beset with fleshy lobes and wattles. The species named has these formations highly developed, a small hind toe, and no crest; the plumage is chiefly white, varied with black on the head, neck, wings, and tail. See the case of wattles and spurs explained under spur-winged.—Wattled stare of Latham, Creadion carunculatum, a corvine bird of New Zealand, 8 or 9 inches long, chiefly of a chestnut color, the head and tail black, the wings black and chestnut, the wattles yellow or vermillion.—Wattled tree-crow, a wattle-crow.

wattle-faced (wot'1-fäst), a. Lantern-jawed; thin-faced.

Thou wattle-fac'd sing'd pig.

Middleton (and another), Mayor of Queenborough, iii. 3.

wattle-gum (wot'1-gum), n. An Australian gum. See gum arabic, under *gum*².

wattle-jaws (wot'1-jáz), n. pl. Long, lanky jaws; lantern-jaws. Halliwel.

wattle-tree (wot'1-trê), n. Same as wattle, 7.

The golden blossoms of the wattle-trees mark the period [spring] everywhere in Australia.

Contemporary Rev., LII. 407.

wattle-turkey (wot'1-tër'ki), n. The brush-turkey, Talegallus lathamii. See cut under Talegallus.

wattlework (wot'1-wërk), n. A wattled fabric or structure; wickerwork.

A nest of wattle-work formed of silver wire.

S. K. Cat. Sp. Ex., 1882.

The huts were probably more generally made of wattle-work, like those of the Swiss lakes.

Darwin, Early Man in Britain, p. 271.

wattling (wot'1ing), n. [Verbal n. of wattle, v.] A construction made by interweaving twigs, osiers, or flat and elastic material of any sort, with stakes or rods as a substructure.

The houses . . . have here 2 or 3 partitions on the ground floor, made with a wattling of canes or sticks.

Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688.

wattmeter (wot'1-më'tër), n. [*< watt + meter*².] An instrument for measuring in watts the rate of working or the activity in an electric circuit.

—Electrodynamic wattmeter, a wattmeter or electrodynamic meter the indications of which depend on the mutual forces between two coils through one of which a current flows proportional in strength to the electromotive force, while through the other there flows either the whole or a definite fraction of the whole current in the circuit. —Electrostatic wattmeter, an electrometer arranged so that its indications depend on the product of the electrostatic difference of potential between the poles of the electric generator and the electrostatic difference of potential between the ends of a known non-inductive resistance in the circuit through which the current is flowing.

waubeen (wâ-bën'), n. Any South American characinoid fish of the subfamily Erythrininae. See cut under Erythrinus.

wauble, v. A dialectal (Scotch) form of *wabble*¹.

wauch, *waugh*² (wäch), a. A Scotch form of *wallow*³.

waucht, waught (wächt), n. [Also quaich, quaigh, etc. (see quaigh); < Ir. Gael. cuach, a cup, bowl, milking-pail; cf. W. cwch, a round concavity, hive, crown of a hat, boat. Cf. quaff.] A large draught of any liquid. [Scotch.]

She drank it 'a' up at a waught,

Left na ae drap ahin'.

King Henry (Child's Ballads, I. 150).

wauff, a. See *waff*⁸.

waugh¹, v. i. A variant of *waff*¹ for *wane*¹.

waugh², a. See wauch.

waught, n. See waucht.

waukrife, a. See wakerife.

waul, wawl (wâl), v. i. [Freq. of *waw*⁴; cf. caterwaul, caterwaw.] To cry as a cat; squall.

The helpless infant, coming wauling and crying into the world.

Scott.

waule, n. See *wall*⁸.

waur (wâr), a. A Scotch form of *war*² for worse.

waure, n. A dialectal variant of *ware*⁸.

wau-wau, n. Same as wow-wow. H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 70.

wave¹ (wâv), v.; pret. and pp. waved, ppr. waving. [< ME. waven, < AS. wafian, wave, fluctuate (rare), also waver in mind, wonder (cf. AS. wæfre, wavering, restless, wæfer-sýn, wavering vision, spectacle); cf. Icel. vafa*, indicated in the freq. vafra, vafsa, waver, in vafi, doubt, vafi, hesitation, also in vafa, vöfa, mod. vofa, swing, vibrate, waver, = MHG. waben, wave, = Bav. waiben, waver, totter; cf. MHG. freq. waberen, wabelen, webelen, fluctuate, waver. The orig. verb is rare in early use, but the freq. forms represented by waver and wabble are common: see *waver*¹, *wabble*¹. The word has been more or less confused with *wave*², waive.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; undulate; fluctuate; bend or sway back and forth; flutter.

The discourouris saw thame cumande

With baneris to the vnd vafand.

Barbour, Bruce (E. E. T. S.), ix. 245.

I wave, as the see dothe, Je vague or je vndoye. . . . After a storme the see waveth.

Palsgrave, p. 772.

Beneath, stern Neptune shakes the solid ground; The forests wave, the mountains nod around.

Pope, Ilad, xx. 78.

2. To have an undulating form or direction; curve alternately in opposite directions.

To curl their waving hairs. Pope, R. of the L., ii. 97.

Thrice-happy he that may caress

The ringlet's waving balm.

Tennyson, Talking Oak.

3. To give a signal by a gesture of movement up and down or to and fro.

A bloody arm it is, . . . and now

It waves unto us! B. Jonson, Catiline, l. 1.

She waved to me with her hand.

Tennyson, Maud, ix.

4†. To waver in mind; vacillate.

They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved what to think, speak, or write.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 43.

II. trans. 1. To move to and fro; cause to shake, rock, or sway; brandish.

The Childs of Elle hee fought soe well,

As his weapon he wande amale.

The Child of Elle (Child's Ballads, III. 230).

All the company fell singing an Hebrew hymn in a barbarous tone, waving themselves to and fro.

Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 16, 1645.

And July's eve, with balmy breath,

Wav'd the blue-bells on Newark heath.

Scott, L. of L. M., vi., Epil.

Specifically—2. To offer as a wave-offering. See wave-offering.

He shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you.

Lev. xlii. 11.

3. To shape or dispose in undulations; cause to wind in and out, as a line in curves, or a surface in ridges and furrows.

Horns whelk'd and waved like the enridged sea.

Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 71.

This mud [caused by a land-slide] disported itself very much like lava flowing down inclined slopes, the terminations being escalloped, and the surface waved by small ridges like ropy lava.

Science, VI. 87.

4. To decorate with a waving or winding pattern. [Rare.]

He glue him th' armes which late I conquer'd in Asteropæus; forg'd of brass, and wav'd about with tin; 'Twill be a present worthy him.

Chapman, Ilad, xxiii. 482

5. To signal by a wave of the hand, or of a flag, a handkerchief, or the like; direct by a waving gesture or other movement, as in beckoning.

We mistrusted those knavery, and, being waved by them to come a shore, yet we would not.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. li. 38.

Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground.

Shak., Hamlet, I. 4. 61.

6. To express, as a command, direction, farewell, etc., by a waving movement or gesture.

Perchance the maiden smiled to see Yon parting lingerer wave adieu.

Scott, L. of the L., li. 5.

I retained my station when he waved to me to go, and announced, "I can not think of leaving you, sir."

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

7. To water, as silk. See water, v. t. 3.

The waved water chamolot was from the beginning esteemed the richest and bravest wearing.

Holland, tr. of Pliny, viii. 48.

wave¹ (wāv), n. [ME. wave*, wave; < wave, v. The word wave in its most common sense has taken the place, in literary use, of the diff. noun wave, wave, a wave. The form wave could not, however, change into wave: see *wave*¹. The noun wave, as well as the verb, has been confused with *waive*¹.] 1. A disturbance of the surface of a body in the form of a ridge and trough, propagated by forces tending to restore the surface to its figure of equilibrium, the particles not advancing with the wave.

No ship yit kurf the waves grene and blew.

Chaucer, Former Age, l. 21.

When you do dance, I wish you
A wave of the sea, that you might over do Nothing but that.

Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 141.

2. Water; a stream; the sea. [Poetical.]

The laughing tides that lave
These Edens of the eastern wave.

Byron, The Ghazal.

3. A form assumed by parts of a body which are out of equilibrium, such that as fast as the particles return they are replaced by others moving into neighboring positions of stress, so that the whole disturbance is continually propagated into new parts of the body while preserving more or less perfectly the same shape and other characters. In a somewhat wider sense the word is applied in cases where there is no progression through the body; thus, the shape of a vibrating piano-string may be called a wave. But in its narrowest and most proper sense it is restricted to an advancing elevation or depression of the surface of a body. An advancing elevation is called a positive wave, a depression a negative wave. Waves on the surfaces of liquids are distinguished into four orders. A wave of the first order, also called a wave of translation, leaves the particles, after its passage, shifted in the line of its motion. It is also called a solitary wave, because a single impulse produces but one elevation or depression, which has no definite length, but extends over the whole surface. The negative wave of this sort shortly breaks; it is only the positive wave, which leaves the particles in advance of their initial positions, which can be propagated far. This wave is also called Scott Russell's great wave, because it was first discovered by that engineer in 1834, and because, owing to its form, it cannot be seen unless it is very high.

The velocity of such a wave is equal to $\sqrt{g(h+k)}$, where g is the acceleration of gravity, h the depth of the liquid in repose, and k the height of the crest of the wave above the plane of repose. This wave dies down of itself in a canal of uniform depth, independently of friction, and when it passes into shallow water it breaks as soon as h is no greater than k . A canal-boat produces such a wave, and consequently can be propelled at the rate of speed of the wave far more economically than at any other. In waves of the second order, called oscillatory waves, observation shows that each particle describes at a uniform rate of motion a circle in a vertical plane; but according to theory other orbits are possible. The particle at the crest of the wave is at the highest part of its path, that in the trough at the lowest. As long as the momentum of the particles is kept up, wave must succeed wave. If the water has a flow opposite to the direction of propagation of the waves and equal to it in velocity, it is plain that each particle will describe a prolate cycloid, and this is consequently the form of the waves. Waves thus brought to a standstill by the flow of the water are called standing waves. (See fig. 1.) They are often seen in rapidly running water.

Fig. 1. Standing waves in a torrent.

If the motion of the liquid is irrotational, theory shows that the waves cannot be cycloidal. But in regard to this whole subject neither theory nor observation can be trusted implicitly to give the truth of nature. The velocity of propagation of oscillatory waves, at least in deep water, is represented by the expression $\sqrt{g\lambda/2\pi}$, where λ is the length of the wave from crest to crest. But the velocity of propagation of a group of waves is much slower. Oscillatory waves break on a shelving shore when their height is about equal to the depth of the water, and from each one, as it breaks, a wave of the first order is produced. (See fig. 2.) Waves of the third order, called ripples, are distinguished from those of the second order in the fact that the shorter they are the more rapidly they move.

While an oscillatory wave 32 inches long will advance 3 feet per second, and one of 8 inches long only 1 foot per second, a ripple a quarter of an inch long will move 1 foot per second, a ripple an eighth of an inch long will move $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet per second, and so on. The reason is that the force of restoration of the particles is here not chiefly gravity, but the surface-tension of the liquid. Ripples very rapidly die out. Waves of the fourth order are sound-waves. They are propagated in water at the rate of about 1,580 yards per second—that is, at a much greater speed than that of sound in air. In the case of sound propagated in the air, the waves are formed by the alternate forward and back motion of the air-particles in the direction in which the sound is being propagated; the waves are consequently waves of condensation and rarefaction, having in the free air a spherical form. The amplitude of vibration or excursion of each particle is very small, but the wave-length is large—for the middle C of the keyboard, about $\frac{1}{4}$ feet. A sound-wave travels in air about 1,100 feet per second. (See further under sound.) In the case of radiant energy (heat and light) propagated through the ether, the ether-particles vibrate transversely to the line of propagation; here the wave-length is very small—for violet light, about 0.000,016 of an inch, for red about twice this length, while the dark heat-waves, though much longer, are still very minute (see spectrum). A light-wave (or, more generally, an ether-wave) travels in space about 185,000 miles per second. Hertz has shown recently (1887) that by a very rapid oscillating electrical discharge, as between two knobs, a disturbance is produced in the surrounding ether which is propagated as electric waves with a velocity like that of light. These electric waves in Hertz's experiments were found to have a wave-length of upward of one meter. They are reflected from the surface of a conductor, but are transmitted by a non-conductor, as pitch, and may be brought to a focus; they may be made to interfere, then forming nodal points, and by passage through a grating of parallel wires they may be polarized. These electric waves are hence in all essential respects like light-waves, but differ in their relatively enormous length and the corresponding slowness of the oscillations. These experiments of Hertz form a most important confirmation of the electromagnetic theory of light proposed by Maxwell (see light).

That which in waves of fluid is rest is in waves of sound silence, and in waves of light darkness.

Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 220.

The reason why one end of the coloured band [spectrum] . . . is red and the other blue is that in light as in sound we have a system of disturbances or waves; we have long waves and short waves, and what the low notes are to music the blue waves are to light.

J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 34.

4. One of a series of curves in a waving line, or of ridges in a furrowed surface; an undulation; a swell.

A winning wave (deserving note)

In the tempestuous petticoat.

Herrick, Delight in Disorder.

The ears are furnished with feather to the same extent with a slight wave, but no curl.

Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 107.

5. Figuratively, a flood, influx, or rush of anything, marked by unusual volume, extent, uprising, etc., and thus contrasted with preceding and following periods of the opposite character; something that swells like a sea-wave at recurring intervals; often, a period of intensity, activity, or important results: as, a wave of religious enthusiasm; waves of prosperity.

A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,

And waves of shadow went over the wheat.

Tennyson, The Poet's Song.

An emotional wave once roused tends to continue for a certain length of time. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 32.

Specifically—6. In meteor, a progressive oscillation of atmospheric pressure or temperature, or an advancing movement of large extent in which these are considerably above or below the normal: as, an air-wave, barometric wave, cold wave, warm wave, etc. The term barometric wave is often restricted to those changes in atmospheric pressure which are not connected with cyclonic disturbances nor with the regular diurnal variation, but which include progressive oscillations of a varied character and origin, ranging from those of a short wave-length, which occupy but a fraction of a minute in their passage, to those which cover thousands of miles and occupy several days in their development and subsidence. The remarkable air-waves generated by the eruption of Krakatoa are shown by barographic traces to have had an initial velocity of 700 miles an hour, and to have traveled round the earth not less than seven times.

7. A waved or wavy line of color or texture; an undulation; specifically, the undulating line or streak of luster on cloth watered and calendered.—8. A waving; a gesture, or a signal given by waving.

With clear-rustling wave

The scented pines of Switzerland

Stand dark round thy green grave.

M. Arnold, Stanzas in Memory of the Author of Obermann.

A magnificent old toddy-mixer . . . answered my question by a wave of one hand.

O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 53.

9. A book-name of certain geometrid moths. Thus, Acidalia rubricata is the tawny wave; A. contiguaria is Greening's wave; Venusia cambraria is the Welsh wave, etc.—Barometric wave. See def. 6.—Cold wave, a progressive movement of an area of relatively low temperature. It is preceded by an area of low pressure, and is, in the United States, directly associated with the north-westerly winds which follow a cyclonic depression and accompany the advance of an area of high barometer. The cold wave is, in the United States, in most cases an out-pour of cold dry air from the barren plains of British America, where the air is cooled during the long nights of winter to a very low temperature. In Texas and the Gulf of Mexico the cold wave is termed a wurher. The approach of cold waves is made a subject of forecast by the United States Weather Bureau. (See under signal.) A decided fall of temperature of less extent, such as frequently occurs in other than winter months, is termed a cool wave. [U. S.]

When the fall of temperature in twenty-four hours is twenty degrees or more, and covers an area of at least fifty thousand square miles, and the temperature in any part of the area goes as low as 36°, it is called a cold-wave. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XL. 463.

Dicrotic wave. See dicrotic.—Hot wave, warm wave, a progressive movement, generally eastward, of an area of relatively high temperature, but without so definite a boundary and character as distinguish a cold wave. The general conditions of a warm wave, or heated term, in summer are pressure decreasing to the northward, southerly winds, fair or hazy weather, with practically unbroken isolation, and, in some cases, such an amount of vapor in the air as to diminish the usual nocturnal radiation. [U. S.]

—Length of a wave, or wave-length, the distance between any two particles which are in the same phase.—Period of a wave, the time between the passage of successive crests, or between successive extreme displacements of a particle in the same manner.—Fredicrotic wave. See fredicrotic.—Smoky wave. See smoky.—Storm-wave.

(a) A sea-wave raised at the center of a cyclonic storm by the low atmospheric pressure and the force of the winds. It advances with the progressive motion of the storm, and has all the properties of a true wave. When augmented by a heavy fall of rain, and blown by strong winds upon a low shore, the storm-wave causes disastrous inundations. The thickly populated low-lands at the head of the Bay of Bengal have been the scene of frequent storm-floods, occasioning enormous losses of life and property. (b) In general, on sea-coasts, the increased wave-motion accompanying storms.—Subungled wave, a British geometrid moth, Acidalia strigularia.—Tidal wave. See tidal.—Type of a wave. See type.—Warm wave. See hot wave, above.—Wave of contraction, in physiol., visible muscular contraction as propagated from a point where the muscle itself is stimulated.—Wave of stimulation, in physiol., the motor influence of a nerve, supposed to be transmitted by molecular undulation.

I shall always speak of muscle-fibres as conveying a visible wave of contraction, and of nerve-fibres as conveying an invisible, or molecular, wave of stimulation. G. J. Romanes, Jelly Fish, etc., p. 25.

Wave of translation. See def. 3. (See also brain-wave, pulse-wave.)—Syn. 1. Wave, Billow, Surge, Breaker, Surf, Swell, Ripple. Wave is the general word. A billow is a great round and rolling wave. Surge is only a somewhat stronger word for billow. A breaker is a wave breaking or about to break upon the shore or upon rocks. Surf is the collective name for breakers: as, to bathe in the surf; it is sometimes popularly used for the foam at the edge or crest of the breaker. Swell is the name for the fact of the rising (and falling) of water, especially after the wind has subsided, or for the water that so rises (and falls), or for any particular and occasional disturbance of water by such rising (and falling): as, the boat was swamped by the swell from the steamer. Ripple is the name for the smallest kind of wave.

The high watery walls came rolling in, and at their highest tumbled into surf. . . . Some white-headed billows thundered on. . . . The breakers rose, and, looking over one another, bore one another down, and rolled in, in interminable hosts. . . . The sea . . . carried men, spars, . . . into the boiling surge.

Dickens, David Copperfield, lv.

This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon.

Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters.

Across the boundless east we drove,
Where those long swells of breaker sweep
The nutmeg rocks and isles of clove.

wave-breast (wāv'brest), n. A breast offered as a wave-offering (which see).

waved (wāvd), a. [*wave*¹ + -ed².]

1. Having a waving outline or appearance. See *wave*¹, v. t. Specifically—(a) In zool., marked with waves; wavy in color or texture; undulated. (b) In entom., crenate or crenulate, as a margin; sinuous; undulated. (c) In arms, shaped in waves or undulations, as the edges of certain swords and daggers. Heavy swords of the middle ages were sometimes shaped in this way, apparently with the object of breaking plates of armor the more readily. In the Malay creese, however, the object is probably to make a more dangerous wound.

Malay Creese, with waved blade.

2. Same as watered: noting silk, forged steel, etc.—3. In bot., undate.—4. In her., same as undé.—Waved sandpiper. See sandpiper.—Waved sword, in her., a flamboyant sword used as a bearing.—Waved wheel. See wheel.

wave-front (wāv'frunt), n. The continuous line or surface including all the particles in the same phase. It is a spherical surface for sound, and for light in an isotropic medium.

wave-goose (wāv'gōs), n. The brant- or Brent-goose, Bernicla brenta. [Durham, Eng.]

wave-length (wāv'length), n. The distance between the crests of two adjacent waves, or between the lowest parts of the depressions on each side of a wave; more generally, the distance between any particle of the disturbed medium and the next which is in the same phase with it. See wave, 3.

The wave-length of a ray of light in any given substance is consequently obtained by dividing the wave-length in air by the index of refraction of the substance itself.

Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 245.

No difference but that of wave-length is recognized between waves of radiant heat and of radiant light.

See Amer. Supp., p. 8801.

waveless (wāv'les), a. [< wave + -less.] Free from waves; undisturbed; unagitated; still.

Smoother than this waveless spring.

Parle, David and Bethesda.

The mist that sleeps on a waveless sea.

Hogg, Kilmeny.

Unmoved the bannered blazoury hung waveless as a pall.

Burham, Inguldsby Legends, II. iii.

wavelet (wāv'let), n. [< wave + -let.] A small wave; a ripple.

Like the vague sighings of a wind at even,

That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea.

Shelley, Queen Mab, viii.

The head, with its thin wavelets of brown hair, indents the little pillow wave-line (wāv'lin), n. 1. The outline of a wave; specifically, in physics, the path of a wave of light, sound, etc., or the graphic representation of such a path.—2. Naut., the general outline of the surface of sea-waves; specifically used attributively to note a method of ship-building devised by J. Scott Russell, in which the lines of the hull of a vessel are adapted scientifically to the lines of the waves, and are nearly or quite cycloidal.—3. One of the series of lines or furrows produced by the sea-waves upon a sandy beach.

wavellite (wāv'vél-it), n. [Named after William Wavell, an English medical practitioner (died 1829), by whom it was discovered.] A hydrous phosphate of aluminium, commonly found in radiated hemispherical or globular crystalline concretions from a very small size to 1 inch in diameter, and of a white to yellow-green or brown color. See cut under radiate.

wave-loaf (wāv'lōf), n. A loaf for a wave-offering.

Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth deals.

Lev. xxiii. 17.

wave-molding (wāv'mōl'ding), n. In arch., a molding of undulating outline, resembling more or less closely a succession of waves; particularly, a molding of Greek origin, much used in Renaissance and modern architecture, having the character of a series of breaking waves, much conventionalized.

wave-motion (wāv'mō'shon), n. Motion in curves alternately concave and convex like that of the waves of the sea; undulatory motion. See wave, 3.

While other-waves are in course of traversing the ether, there is neither heat, light, nor chemical decomposition; merely wave-motion, and transference of energy by wave-motion.

A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 434.

The essential characteristic of wave-motion is that a disturbance of some kind is handed on from one portion of a solid or fluid mass to another.

P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 603.

wave-offering (wāv'of'ér-ing), n. In the ancient Jewish law, an offering presented with a horizontal movement of the hands forward and backward and toward the right and left, whereas the heave-offering was elevated and lowered.

wave-path (wāv'pāth), n. The line along which any point in any wave is propagated. [Rare.]

The radial lines along which an earthquake may be propagated from the centrum are called wave-paths.

J. Milne, Earthquakes, p. 9.

waver (wāv'vēr), v. [*< ME. waveren, wayveren, vacillare, < AS. as if wafrian (cf. wāfrr, waveren, wandering, restless: said of flame and fire, the mind or spirit, etc.) = MHG. wabern, G. dial. wabern, waver, totter, move to and fro, = Icel. vafra, hover about, = Norw. vavra, flap about; also, with var. suffix, MHG. wabelen, wabelen, fluctuate, waver, = Icel. vafra, hover about (see wabble!); freq. of the verb represented by wavel, q. v.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; wave; float; flutter; be tossed or rocked about; sway.

All in wer for to walt, waygeronde he sote,
But he held hym on horse, houte o lofte.

Destruction of Troy (E. T. S.), I. 8266.

For an Outlawe, this is the Lawe,
That Men hym take and blinde,
Without pytee, hanged to bee,
And waver with the Wynde.

The Nut-Brown Maid, quoted by Prior (Poems, [ed. 1756, I. 147].

The wind in his raiment wavered.

William Morris, Sigurd, II.

2. To quiver; flicker; glimmer; glance.

As when a sunbeam wavers warm
Within the dark and dimpled beck.

Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

3. To falter; fail; reel; totter.

Keep my wits, Heaven! I feel 'em waverin';

Oh God, my head!

Fletcher, Pilgrim, III. 3.

How many waverin' steps can we retrace in our past lives!

Channing, Perfect Life, p. 74.

Like the day of doom it seemed to her waverin' senses.

Longfellow, Evangeline, I. 6.

4. To be undetermined or irresolute; fluctuate; vacillate.

Therefore be sure, and waver not of God's love and favour towards you in Christ.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1858), II. 132.

He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

James I. 6.

I expect you should sollicit me as much as if I were wavering at the Gate of a Monastery, with one Foot over the Threshold.

Congreve, Way of the World, IV. 6.

=Syn. 1 and 4. Vacillate. See fluctuate.—4. Hesitate, etc. See scruple.

II. trans. 1. To cause to wave or move to and fro; set in waving motion; brandish.

Item, if the Admirall shall happen to hull in the night, then to make a waverin' light over his other light, waverin' the light upon a pole.

Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 147.

2. To demur or scruple about; hesitate at; shirk.

The inconstant Barons waverin' every hour
The fierce encounter of this bolst'rous tide
That easily might her livelihood devour.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, I. 34.

waver (wāv'vēr), n. [< wave + -er.] One who or that which waves; specifically, in printing, an inking-roller; an apparatus which distributes ink on the table or on other rollers, but not on the form of types; so called from its vibratory movement.

As the carriage returns, this strip of tuk is distributed on the inking table by rollers placed diagonally across the machine. The diagonal position gives them a waving motion; hence they are called wavers.

Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 706.

waver (wāv'vēr), n. [Perhaps < wave + -er.] A sapling or timberling left standing in a fallen wood. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

As you pass along, prune and trim up all the young wavers.

Evelyn, Sylva, III. I. 7.

waver-dragon (wāv'vēr-drag'on), n. [< waver for wiver + dragon.] In her., the wivern.

waverer (wāv'vēr-ēr), n. [< waver + -er.] One who or that which wavers or fluctuates; especially, a person who vacillates or is undecided in mind.

Come, young waverer, come, go with me.

Shak., R. and J., II. 3. 89.

This prospect of converting votes was a dangerous distraction to Mr. Brooke; his impression that waverers were likely to be allured by wavering statements . . . gave Will Ladislaw much trouble.

George Eliot, Middlemarch, II.

waveringly (wāv'vēr-ing-li), adv. In a wavering, vacillating, or irresolute manner.

Loke not waveringly about you, haue no distrust, be not afraid.

J. Udall, On I. Pol. v.

waveringness (wāv'vēr-ing-nes), n. The character or state of a waverer; vacillation.

The waveringness of our cupidities turneth the minde into a dizziness unawares to itself.

W. Montague, Devoute Essays, Pref.

waver-roller (wāv'vēr-rō'lér), n. In printing, a roller made to vibrate in a diagonal direction on the inking-table of a printing-machine for the purpose of distributing the ink.

wavery (wāv'vēr-i), a. [< waver + -y.] Wavering; unsteady; shaky; faltering.

Old letters closely covered with a wavery writing.

Miss Thackeray, Book of Sibylls, p. 4.

He's . . . wavery . . . his love changes like the seasons.

Christian Union, July 28, 1887.

wave-shell (wāv'shel), n. In earthquake-shocks, one of the waves of alternate compression and expansion, having theoretically the form of concentric shells, which are propagated in all directions through the solid materials of the earth's crust from the seismic focus to the earth's surface. Encyc. Brit., VII. 610.

waveson (wāv'son), n. [Appar. irreg. < wave + son, after the analogy of flotson, jetson, jettison, otherwise flotam, jetsam.] A name given to goods which after a shipwreck appear floating on the sea.

wave-surface (wāv'sér'fās), n. A surface whose equation in rectangular coordinates is

$$x^2/(1-A^2r^2) + y^2/(1-B^2r^2) + z^2/(1-C^2r^2) = 0.$$

If upon every central section of a quadric surface be erected a perpendicular at the center, and points be taken on this perpendicular at distances from the center equal to the axes of the section, then the locus of these points will be the wave-surface. It is frequently called Frenet's wave-surface, to distinguish it from Huygens's wave-surface, which is simply an ellipsoid—the latter being the form of the wave-front of a uniaxial crystal, the former that of a biaxial crystal.—Malus's wave-surface [discovered by E. L. Malus (1775–1812) in 1810], a surface of the wave-front of light emanating from a point but undergoing reflections and refractions at different surfaces.

wave-trap (wāv'trap), n. In hydraulic engin., a widening inward of the spaces between piers, to afford space to permit waves rolling in between the piers to lose force by spreading themselves.

wave-worn (wāv'wörn), a. Worn by the waves.

The shore that o'er his wave-worn basils bow'd.

Shak., Tempest, II. I. 120.

wavy, wavy (wāv'vi), n.; pl. waveys, wawies (-viz). [From Amer. Ind. name wawa.] A goose of the genus Chen; a snow-goose.

Shooting Wavies on the little lakes with which this region [the Red River country] is dotted is said to be a favorite amusement of the sportsmen.

Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 192.

Blue wavy, the blue-winged goose, Chen caerulescens.—Horned wavy, the smallest snow-goose, Chen (Eutamias) rossi, which has at times the base of the bill studded with tubercles. It is exactly like the snow-goose in plumage, but no larger than a mallard, and inhabits arctic America, coming southward in migration. It was recognizably described under its present name by Hearne, but lost sight of for nearly a century, till brought again to notice, in 1861, by J. Cassin.—White wavy, the snow-goose. See cut under Chen.

wavily (wāv'vi-li), adv. In a wavy manner, form, or direction.

Mr. Rappit, the hair-dresser, with his well-anointed coronal locks tending wavily upward.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, I. 9.

waviness (wāv'vi-nes), n. The state or quality of being wavy or undulating.

waving-frame (wāv'ving-frām), n. In printing, a frame which carries inking-rollers.

The frame which supports the inking-rollers, called the waving-frame, is attached by hinges to the general framework of the machine; the edge of the stereotype plate cylinder is indented, and rubs against the waving-frame, causing it to vibrate to and fro, and consequently to carry the inking-rollers with it, so as to give them an unceasing traverse motion.

Ure, Dict., III. 655.

wavy (wāv'vi), a. [< wave + -y.] 1. Abounding in waves.

This said, she div'd into the wavy seas.

Chapman, Odyssey, IV. 560.

2. Undulating in movement or shape; wavy: as, wavy hair.

Let her glad Vallies smile with wavy Corn.

Prior, Carmen Seculare (1700), st. 26.

The wavy swell of the sighing reeds.

Tennyson, Dying Swan.

3. In bot., undulating on the border or on the surface. See cut under repand.—4. In her., same as undé.—5. In entom., presenting a series of horizontal curves: noting marks or margins. It is distinct from waved; but the two epithets are somewhat loosely used, and are sometimes interchanged.—6. In zool., undulating; sinuous; wavy; having wavy markings.—Barry wavy. See barry.—Sword wavy. See mord.—Wavy respiration. Same as interrupted respiration (which see, under respiration).

wavy², n. See wavey.

wavy-barred (wá'vi-bárd), a. Crossed with waving lines; undulated: as, the wavy-barred sable, a British moth. See sable, n., 7.

waw¹, n. [< ME. wawe, wage, waghe, waugh, a wave, < AS. wæg = OS. wág = OFries. weg, wai = MD. waeghe = MLG. wáge = OHG. wág (> F. vague), MHG. wāc, G. woge = Goth. wēgs, a wave; < AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry, move: see weigh, *wag*¹, and cf. waw².] A wave.

For, whiles they fly that Gultes devouring jawes,
They on this rock are rent, and sunck in helpes wawes.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 4.

waw², v. t. [< ME. wawen, wagien, < AS. wagian, stir, move, = OHG. wagen, move, = Goth. wagjan, move; a secondary form of AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry: see weigh, and cf. waw¹.] To stir; move; wave.

What wenton ye out in to desert for to see? a reed wawed with the wynd? Wyclif, Luko vii. 24.

waw³, n. [< ME. wave, wagh, wag, wah, wowe, wough, wouh, < AS. wag, wah = OFries. wach = MD. weeghe = Icel. vegg = Sw. vågg = Dan. væg, a wall.] A wall. Piers Plowman (B), iii. 61.

waw⁴ (wá), v. i. [< ME. wawen; imitative; cf. waul, wawl.] To cry as a cat; waul.

wawah (wá'wá), n. Same as wow-wow. Encyc. Brit., IV. 57.

wawet, interj. and n. A Middle English form of woe.

wawl, v. i. See waul.

wawliet, a. An obsolete form of waly¹.

wawproos (wá'prós), n. [Amer. Ind.] The American varying hare, Lepus americanus.

waw-waw (wá'wá), n. [W. Ind.] See Rajania.

wawyt (wá'y), a. [< waw¹ + -y¹.] Abounding in waves; wavy.

I saw come over the wavy flood.

The Isle of Ladies, l. 697.

wax¹ (waks), v. i. [< ME. waxen, wexen (pret. wex, wex, wax, wax, wæx, pl. wexen, woxen, pp. waxen, wexen, woxen), < AS. waxan (pret. wéax, pp. geweaxen) = OS. wahsan = OFries. waxa = D. wassen = OHG. wahsan, MHG. wahsen, G. wachsen = Icel. vaxa = Sw. våxa = Dan. voxe = Goth. wahjan (pret. wóhs, pp. wahsans), grow, increase, wax; = Gr. αἰσθάνω, wax, Skt. √ vaksh, wax, grow; appar. an extension of the root seen in L. augere, increase, AS. edcan, increase: see eke, and augment, action, etc. Hence ult. wax¹, n., waxt¹.] 1. To grow; increase in size; become larger or greater: as, the moon waxes and wanes.

So is pryde waxen

In religioun and in alle the rewme amonge riche and pore,
That preyeres haue no power the pestilence to lette.

Piers Plowman (B), x. 75.

Sothli the child wax, and was countforli, ful of wyndom; and the grace of God was in him. Wyclif, Luko ii. 40.

The child he kepte and norished till it was foire well wosen, and that he myght ride after to court.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 238.

A wexing moon, that soon would wane.

Dryden, Pal. and Arc., III. 649.

Thou shalt wax and he shall dwindle.

Tennyson, Boödicea.

2. To pass from one state to another; become; grow: as, to wax strong; to wax old.

And every man that ought lath in his cofre,
Let him appere and wex a philosofer.

Chaucer, Prolog to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 284.

Now charity is waxen cold, none helpeth the scholar nor yet the poor. Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

First he wox pale, and then wox red.

Scott, Thomas the Rhymer, III.

The commander of Fort Casimir, when he found his martial spirit waxing too hot within him, would sally forth into the fields and lay about him most lustily with his sabre. Irvine, Knickerbocker, p. 315.

Waxing kernels, enlarged lymph-nodes sometimes found in the groin in children: so called because supposed to be associated with growth.

wax¹ (waks), n. [< ME. wax, wexo (= MHG. wahs, increment, increase; also in comp., MD. wasdom = G. wachsthum, growth); from the verb.] 1. Growth; increase; prosperity.

Ful nobley wele the almes yet and do;

About hym gret wex, fair store, and gret light.

Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 653.

2. A wood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wax² (waks), n. [< ME. wax, wex, < AS. wæx = OS. wahs = OFries. wax = D. was = OHG. wahs, G. wachs = Icel. vax = Sw. vax = Dan. vox, wax; cf. OBulg. voskú = Bohem. vosk = Pol. wosk = Russ. voskú = Hung. viaszk = Lith. waszkas, wax (perhaps < Teut.).] Some compare L. viscum, mistletoe, bird-lime: see viscum.] 1. A thick, sticky substance secreted by bees, and used to build their cells; the material of honeycomb; beeswax. In its natural state it is of a dull-yellow color, and smells of honey. Its consistency varies with the temperature; it is ordinarily a pliable solid, readily melted. When purified and bleached, it becomes translucent white, is less tenacious, without taste or smell, and of a specific gravity a little less than that of water. It softens at 80° F., becoming extremely plastic, and retaining any form in which it may be molded, like clay or putty, and melts at 168° F. In chemical composition, wax consists of variable proportions of three substances, called myricin, cerotin, and cerotic acid. Wax is used for many purposes, both in its natural state and variously prepared. As bleached, and also then variously tinted, it is made into wax candles, which give a peculiarly soft light. In pharmacy it enters into the composition of various plasters, ointments, and cerates, as a vehicle for the active ingredients, and to confer upon the preparation a desired consistency. It has varied uses in the plastic arts, especially in the making of anatomical models, artificial flowers and fruits, casts and impressions of various kinds, etc.

This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as irex.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog to C. T., l. 675.

I'll work her as I go: I know she's wax.

Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, II. 2.

The Effigies of his late Majesty King William III. of Glorious Memory is curiously done in Wax to the Life, Richly Drest in Coronation Robes.

Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 283.

2. One of various substances and products resembling beeswax in appearance, consistency, plasticity, and the like, or used for like purposes. (a) The substance worked up from the pollen of flowers by the hind legs of bees, and used to feed their larvae; bee-bread, formerly supposed to be beeswax. (b) The substance secreted by various coccids or wax-scales, especially such as has commercial value. (See wax-insect, 1.) (c) The product of some other homopterous insects. (See wax-insect, 2.) This is more or less stringy and flocculent, and approaches in character the froth or spume of the spittle-insects, but in some cases is usable like beeswax. (d) The secretion of the sebaceous glands of the outer ear; cerumen; ear-wax. (e) A vegetable product which may be regarded as a concrete fixed oil, the principal varieties being Chinese wax, cow-tree wax, carnauba wax, and Japan wax. It may be obtained from the pollen of many flowers, and it forms a part of the green scum of many plants, particularly of the cabbage. It appears as a varnish upon the fruit or the upper surface of the leaves of many trees, as the wax-palm and wax-myrtle. Also called vegetable wax. See cut under Myrica. See also wax-tree, and compounds below. (f) A mineral product, one of certain fossil hydrocarbons which occur in small quantities generally in the Carboniferous formation: called more fully mineral wax. The most familiarly known variety is ozocerite. (g) A substance used for sealing. See sealing-wax.

Quomodo. He will never trust his land in wax and parchment, as many gentlemen have done before him.

Raby. A by-blow for me.

Middleton, Michaelmas Term, IV. 1.

A letter! hum! a suspicious circumstance, to be sure! What, and the seal a true-lover's knot now, ha? or an heart transfixed with darts; or possibly the wax bore the industrious impression of a thumb!

Colman, Jealous Wife, I.

(h) A thick resinous substance, consisting of pitch, resin, and tallow, used by shoemakers for rubbing their thread.

3. A thick syrup produced by boiling down the sap of the sugar-maple tree, cooling on ice, etc. [Local, U. S.]—4. Dung of cattle. [Western U. S.]—5. In coal-mining, puddled clay, used for dams and stoppings.—BRASIL WAX. Same as carnauba wax.—BUTTER OF WAX. See butter.—CARNAUBA WAX, a secretion of the young leaves of the carnauba palm, Copernicia cerifera, of Brazil, which is used in making candles and is exported in large quantities.—CHINESE OR CHINA WAX, a hard white wax, the product of a scale-insect. See pela and wax-insect. (a) EAR-WAX. See def. 2 (d) and cerumen.—GRAFTING-WAX, a mixture made of resin, beeswax, and linseed-oil, for coating the incisions made in a tree in grafting.—IBOTA WAX, a product in Japan of the shrub Ligustrum ibota.—JAPAN WAX, a wax obtained in Japan from the droopes of the wax-tree Rhus succedanea, by crushing, steaming, and pressing. It is used chiefly for candles, and largely exported. The fruit of the lacquer-tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax.—MINERAL WAX. See def. 2 (f).—NOSE OF WAX. See nose.—PARAFFIN WAX, a white substance resembling wax, obtained chiefly from the distillation of petroleum, but also produced in the distillation of coal, wood, and other substances. It is a neutral, easily fusible substance, unaltered by acids or alkalis, and hence has a wide range of uses in the arts.—VEGETABLE WAX, any wax of vegetable origin. See def. 2 (g). The name once denoted specifically myrtle-wax.—WAX DAM, a dam of puddled clay.—WAX DOLL. See wax-doll.—WAX IMPRESSION, in dentistry, a copy in wax of parts of the mouth, taken usually for the purpose of fitting the plate for artificial teeth.—WAX OPAL, a variety of common opal having a resinous wax-like luster.—WAX WALL, a wall of dried clay. [Leicestershire coal-field. Eng.]—WHITE WAX. (a) Bleached beeswax. (b) Chinese wax, or pela. (See also banking-wax, bottle-wax, myrtle-wax, ocuba-wax, sealing-wax.)

wax² (waks), v. [< ME. waxen, wexen; < wax², n.] 1. trans. To treat with wax; smear or rub with wax; make waxy: as, to wax a thread; to wax the floor or a piece of furniture.

Thou tok I and wexede my label in maner of a peyre tables to resceyve distynctly the prikkis of my compas.
Chaucer, Astrolobe, II. §. 40.

He held a long string in one hand, which he drew through the other hand incessantly, as he spoke, just as a shoemaker performs the motion of waxing his thread.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 663.

Waxed end, in shoemaking, a thread the end of which has been stiffened by the use of shoemakers' wax, so as to pass easily through the holes made by the awl; also, a waxed thread terminating in a bristle, for the same purpose. Also reduced to wax-end.—Waxed paper. See paper.

II. intrans. To plaster with clay. [Leicestershire coal-field, Eng.]

wax³ (waks), n. [Appur. < war², v., taken in sense of 'rub,' hence 'beat, thrash.'] A rage; a passion. [Colloq.]

She's in a terrible wax, but she'll be all right by the time he comes back from his holidays.

H. Kingsley, Ravenhoe, v.

wax-berry (waks'ber'i), n. The bayberry, Myrica cerifera.

waxbill (waks'bil), n. One of numerous small Old World birds of the family Ploceidae and subfamily Spermestinae, whose bills have a certain waxen appearance, due to the translucency of the horny covering, which may be white, pink, red, etc. The name appears to have attached more particularly to the members of the genus Estrelda in a broad sense, but is of extensive and varied application. The Java sparrow is a good example. (See cut under sparrow.) The original waxbill, first so named by Edwards in 1751, the waxbill grosbeak of Latham (1783), Loxia atrifida of Linnaeus, and now Estrelda atrifida, or Estrelda atrifida, or Estrelda atrifida (for the name thus wavers in spelling), is a South African bird, ranging as far as Matabeleland on the east and Damaraland on the west coast. It has also been introduced in various places, and is a well-known cage-bird. It is scarcely over 4 inches long, the wing and tail each about 1½ inches; the bill is bright-red; the eyes and feet are brown. The general aspect is that of a brown bird, but this ground-color is intricately varied with several other colors. The vent is black, and there is a crimson streak on each side of the head. The blue-breasted waxbill (E. cyanogastra), the orange-checked (E. melopoda), the red-bellied (E. rubriteris), the grenadier (E. fragilis granatensis), and various others are among the small exotic birds which form the dealer's stock of amadavats, senegals, blood-finches, straw-berry-finches, paddy-birds, and the like.

Waxbill (Estrelda atrifida).

wax-insect (waks'in'sekt), n. 1. One of various coccids or bark-lice which secrete wax; a wax-scale. Nearly all the Coccidae secrete a kind of wax, but that of but few is abundant enough to be of commercial value. Specifically—(a) The Chinese wax-insect, Eriococcus ptele (formerly Coccus sinensis or C. ptele), related to the cochineal bug. It furnishes most of the white wax of commerce, specified as Chinese wax and ptele. This insect, a native of China, occurs upon plants of the genera Rhus, Ligustrum, Hibiscus, Celastrus, etc. The wax is said to be mainly secreted by the male. It is collected from the plants on which it is deposited, melted and clarified, and made into a very high class of candles used in China. It has been imported in England for the same purpose, but is too expensive for general use. (b) Any member of the genus Ceroplastes. The females secrete much wax, usually deposited on the body in regular plates. C. ceriferus is an Indian wax-scale; C. myricæ (an old Linnean species) is found at the Cape of Good Hope; C. floridensis is a wax-scale of Florida; C. cirripediformis is the barnacle-scale. (c) A scale of the genus Cerococcus, as C. quercus, which secretes large masses of bright-yellow wax upon the twigs of various oaks, as Quercus undulata, Q. agrifolia, and Q. oblongifolia, in Arizona and California. 2. One of various insects of the family Fulgoroidea, and of one of the genera Phenax, Lystra, and Platys. In the case of the species of Lystra, the wax is secreted in long white strings from the end of the abdomen. This wax is said to be used in the manufacture of candles in the East Indies and China.

wax-light (waks'lit), n. [= D. waslicht = G. waschlicht (cf. Icel. vaxljós, Sw. vaxljus, Dan. vaxlys); as *wax*² + *light*¹.] A candle, taper, or night-light made of wax.

wax-scott (waks'skót), n. A tax or money payment made by parishioners to supply the church with wax candles.

wax-tree (waks'tré), n. One of several trees, of different localities, the source of some kind of vegetable or insect wax. (a) The Japan wax-tree, specifically Rhus succedanea, a small tree originally from the Loochoo Islands, now extensively planted in Japan, especially on the borders of fields, for its small clustered berries, which yield by expression an excellent candle-wax. The lacquer-tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax. (b) In China, one of several trees yielding the pella, or white wax (see *wax*²), which incrusts their twigs as the result of the puncture of an insect. One of the most important is a species of privet, Ligustrum lucidum; another is an ash, Fraxinus Chinensis. Ligustrum Itoia appears to furnish a variety of the same product. (c) A plant of the genus Vatica, which consists of trees and shrubs abounding in a yellow resinous juice. This is collected from some South American species, particularly V. Guianensis, and from its qualities is sometimes called American gamboge. (d) The Colombian varnish-tree, Elaeagia utilis. (e) The wax-myrtle, Myrica cerifera. [Rare.]

A fragrant shrub, called the Anémiche by the Indians, had attracted the attention of the government. It is the wax-tree, or candle-berry (Myrica cerifera), of which the wax is used for making candles.

Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 520.

wax-weed (waks'wéd), n. An American herb, Cuphea viscosissima, sometimes designated as clanny cuphea. It is a branching plant with purple stems covered with extremely viscid hairs; the petals of the small flowers are also purple. The full name is blue wax-weed.

waxwing (waks'wing), n. An oscine passerine bird of the genus Ampelis (or Bombycilla), family Ampelidae: so called because the secondary quills of the wings, and sometimes other feathers of the wings or tail, are tipped with small red horny appendages resembling sealing-wax. There are three species—the Bohemian waxwing or chatterer, A. garrulus, of the northern hemisphere generally, breeding in high latitudes, and migrating southward irregularly, sometimes in flocks of vast extent; the red-winged Japanese waxwing, A. phoeniceus; and the smaller Carolina waxwing, cedar-bird, cedar-lark, cherry-bird, etc., of North America, A. cedrorum, the prib chatterer of Latham, 1785. The sealing-wax tips are the enlarged, hardened, and peculiarly modified prolongation of the shaft of the feather, composed of central and peripheral substances differing in the shape of the pigment-cells, which contain abundance of red and yellow coloring matter. Their use is unknown.

Bohemian Waxwing (Ampelis garrulus).

waxwork (waks'wérk), n. 1. Work in wax; especially, figures or ornaments made of wax; in ordinary usage, figures, as of real persons, usually of life-size, and more or less of deceptive resemblance, the heads, hands, etc., being in wax, and the rest of the figure so set up and clothed as to increase the imitative effect.

On Wednesday last Mrs. Goldsmith, the famous Woman for Waxwork, brought to Westminster Abbey the Effigies of that celebrated Beauty the late Duchess of Richmond, which is said to be the richest figure that ever was set up in King Henry's Chapel.

Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 283.

2. pl. A place where a collection of such figures is exhibited.—3. The climbing bitter-sweet, Celastrus scandens: so named on account of the waxy scarlet aril of the fruit. See Celastrus and staff-tree. Also called Roxbury wax-work.

waxworker (waks'wér'kér), n. 1. One who works in wax; a maker of waxwork.—2. A bee which makes wax.

wax-worm (waks'wér'm), n. The larva of the wax-moth.

waxy¹ (wak'si), a. [*war*² + *-y*¹.] 1. Resembling wax or putty in appearance, softness, plasticity, adhesiveness, or other properties; waxen; hence, pliable; yielding; impressionable.

That the softer waxy part of you may receive some impression from this discourse, let us close all with an application. Hammond, Works, III. 636.

Specifically—2. Noting certain complexions. (a) Falid or blanched: of a translucent pallor, as in bloodlessness. (b) Of a dull, pasty, whitish color, sometimes inclining to the yellowishness of raw beeswax. This is a complexion almost diagnostic of the so-called scrofulous or cancerous diathesis, and of persons in whom the opium habit is confirmed and of long standing.

3. Made of wax; abounding in wax; waxed: as, a waxy dressing for leather.—Waxy degeneration. (a) Same as lardaceous disease (which see, under lardaceous). (b) A change of parts of the muscular fibers into a peculiar hyaline substance, which differs from lardacein; it occurs in certain cases of typhoid fever, meningitis, and other acute febrile disorders.—Waxy liver, kidney, spleen, etc., a liver, kidney, spleen, etc., which has undergone waxy degeneration.

waxy² (wak'si), a. [*wax*³ + *-y*¹.] Angry; wrathful; irate. [Slang.]

The cloister oped her pitying gate.

Scott, L. of the L., III. 6.

2. Irregular; vacillating; unsteady, undulating, or fluctuating: as, the wayward flight of certain birds.

Send its rough wayward roots in all directions.

Smithson, Useful Book for Farmers, p. 32. (Encyc. Dict.)

=Syn. Wayward, Wifful, Contrary, Untoward, headstrong, intractable, unruly. The italicized words tend toward the same meaning by different ways. Wayward, by derivation, applies to one who turns away from what he is desired or expected to be or to do; but, from its seeming derivation, it has come to apply more often to one who turns toward ways that suit himself, whether or not they happen to be what others desire. Wifful suggests that the person is full of self-will, which asserts itself against those whose wishes ought to be deferred to or whose commands should be obeyed. Contrary and untoward express the same idea, the one in a positive, the other in a negative form. Contrary is an energetic word, expressing the idea that one takes, or is disposed to take, the course exactly opposite to that which he is expected or desired to take. Contrariness, when ingrained, becomes perverseness: as, a contrary disposition; a contrary fellow. This use of contrary is by many considered colloquial, but has the recommendation of figurative force. Contrary and untoward view the person as one to be managed; untoward views the person also as the object of mental or moral discipline: this perhaps through its use in Acts ii. 40. An untoward person is not responsive to persuasion, advice, influence, or requests; untoward circumstances are similarly such as do not help us in our plans. All these words imply that the only consistency in the person's conduct is in this self-willed independence of others' wishes or opposition to them, but untoward implies it least. See perverseness.

way-warden (wā'wār'dn), n. A keeper or surveyor of roads.

Woodcutler. Had'st best repent and mend thy ways.
Peasant. The way-warden may do that; I wear out no ways; I go across country.

Kingalee, Saint's Tragedy, li. 6.

waywardly (wā'wār'd-li), adv. In a wayward manner; frowardly; perversely.

waywardness (wā'wār'd-nēs), n. [ME. weiwardnesse, perverseness; < wayward + -ness.] The character of being wayward; frowardness; perverseness.

The unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.
Shak., Learn, i. 1. 302.

waywise (wā'wīz), a. [< wayl + wis. Cf. way-witty; see also waywiser.] Expert in finding or keeping the way; knowing the way or route. Ask.

waywiser (wā'wīz'ēr), n. [= D. wegwijzer, a guide, = G. wegweiser, a way-mark, guide, = Sw. vägvisare = Dan. vejviser, a guide, a directory; as wayl + wiser*, shower, indicator, < wisc, point out, show, + -er.] An instrument for measuring the distance which a wheel rolls over a road; an odometer or perambulator.

I went to see Colonel Blount, who showed me the application of the way-wiser to a coach, exactly measuring the miles, and showing them by an index as we went on. It had three circles, one pointing to the number of rods, another to the miles, by 10 to 1000, with all the subdivisions of quarters.
Evelyn, Diary, Aug. 6, 1657.

way-witty, a. [ME. weiwitti; < wayl + witty. Cf. waywise.] Same as waywise.

waywode, waywodeship. Same as voivode, voivodeship.

wayworn (wā'wōrn), a. Wearied or worn by or in traveling.

A way-worn traveller.
Longfellow, Hyperion, li. 2.

waywort (wā'wōrt), n. The pimpernel, Anagallis arvensis. [Prov. Eng.] wayz-goose, n. [An erroneous spelling of waize-goose*, < waize + goose.] 1. A stubble-goose; hence, a fat goose—that is, one ready to kill in harvest-time.—2. An entertainment given by an apprentice to his fellow-workmen, of which the goose was the crowning dish; hence, in recent times, a printers' annual dinner, the funds for which are collected by stewards regularly appointed by "the chapel."

we (wē), pron.; pl. of I. [Early mod. E. also wec; < ME. we, < AS. wē = OS. wī = OFries. wī = D. wij = OHG. MHG. G. wir = Icel. vēr, vēr = Sw. Dan. vi = Goth. wais, < *Teut. wiz, wis*, with appar. nom. suffix -s, prob. = Skt. vayan, we. The L. and Gr. forms are different; L. nos, pl. (including dual), = Gr. vō, dual; Gr. ipis, we, appar. belonging to the stem of ēpe, etc., me (see me).] In AS. wē had a dual, wit, which disappeared in the earliest ME. period. See I, me, our, and us.] 1 and another or others; I and he or she, or I and they: a personal pronoun, taking the possessive our or ours (see our) and the objective (dative or accusative) us.

Go we now on goddess halue.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), i. 2803.

How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.
Shak., K. John, v. 3. 1.

On the left hand left wee two little Islands.
Sandys, Travels, p. 8.

It may be that the gulfs will wash us down;
It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

We is sometimes, like they, vaguely used for society, people in general, the world, etc.; but when the speaker or writer uses we he identifies himself more or less directly with the statement; when he uses they he implies no such identification. Both pronouns thus used may be translated by the French on and the German man: as, we (or they) say, French on dit, German man sagt.

Yet seen too oft, familiar with her [vice's] face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
Pope, Essay on Man, li. 220.

The instances in which our feelings bias us in spite of ourselves are of hourly recurrence.

H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 196.

Many tongues have a double first person plural, one inclusive and one exclusive of the person or persons addressed: one we which means 'I and my party, as opposed to you; and one that means 'my party and yours, as opposed to all third persons.

Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 219.

We is frequently used by individuals, as editors and authors, when alluding to themselves, in order to avoid the appearance of egotism which it is assumed would result from the frequent use of the pronoun I. The plural style is used also by kings and other potentates, and is said to have been first used in his edicts by King John of England; according to others, by Richard I. The French and German sovereigns followed the example about the beginning of the thirteenth century.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaughtering hands.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., li. 1. 86.

We and us are sometimes misused for each other.

To poor we

Thine enmity's most capital.

Shak., Cor., v. 3. 103.

Nay, no compiment: . . . Shall 's to dinner, gentlemen?
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, li. 2.

Our bodies themselves, are they simply ours, or are they us?
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., i. 291.

We-uns (literally, we ones), we or us. [Dialectal, southern U. S.]

"Grind some fur we-uns ter-morrer?" asked Ab. "I'll grind yer bones, ef ye'll send 'em down," said Amos.
M. N. Murfree, Trophoe of the Great Smoky Mountains, ix.

weabit, n. See way-bit.

weak (wēk), a. [< ME. weik, weyk, waik, wayk, a northern form (< Icel. veikr, reykr) taking the place of the southern form woke, woc, wake, war, < AS. wac, waac, pliant, weak, easily bent, = OS. wēk = D. week = MLG. wēk, LiG. week = OHG. weih, MHG. G. weich = Icel. veikr, reykr, rarely vākr = Sw. vek = Dan. veg, pliant, weak; from the verb appearing in AS. wican (pret. wāc, pp. wicen) = OS. wikan = OFries. wika, wiaka = D. wijken = OHG. wikkān, MIHG. wicken, G. weichen, give way, yield, = Icel. vika (pret. veyk, pp. vikinn) = Sw. vika = Dan. vige, turn, turn aside, veer; cf. Gr. ikēv (for ikeiv), yield, give way, = L. √ vic in vicare (for vicitare*), shun, avoid, viz*, viciis, change. To the same root are referred wickl, wicker.] 1. Bending under pressure, weight, or force; pliant or pliable; yielding; lacking stiffness or firmness: as, the weak stem of a plant.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will;
The weak oppress'd [impressed], the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1242.

2. Lacking strength; not strong. Specifically (a) Breaking down under force or stress; liable to fall, fail, or collapse under strain; incapable of long resistance or endurance; frail, fragile, or restless: as, a weak vessel, bridge, rope, etc.; a weak fortress.

How weak the barrier of mere Nature proves, Oppos'd against the pleasures Nature loves!

This weaking cry of children.

Harper's Mag., LXXXVI. 570.

weakly (wēk'li), a. [*ME. weakly (cf. lecl. weakly), earlier woelic, waclic, weakly, < AS. waclic, weak, vain, mean, vile, < wac, weak; see weak and -ly.] Weak; feeble; not robust; as, a weakly woman; a man of weakly constitution.

Those that are weakly, as Hypochondriacks and Hysterics.
Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Phil. and Physick (ed. 1702), vi.

When I came at the gate that is at the head of the way, the Lord of that place did entertain me freely; no other objected he against my weakly looks.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

weakly (wēk'li), adv. [ME. wacliche, wacliche, < AS. waclic, weakly, meanly, vilely, < waclic, weak; see weakly.] In a weak manner, in any sense of the word weak.

If a shoemaker should have no shoes in his shop, but only work as he is bespoken, he should be weakly customed.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 219.

weak-minded (wēk'mīn'ded), a. Of a weak mind; of feeble intellect; also, indicating weakness of mind.

The Duke of York . . . prevailed for a time, and fruitlessly endeavoured to bind a weak-minded king by pledges.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., i.

If he should go abroad, his mother might think he had some weak-minded view of joining Julia Hallow, and trying, with however little hope, to win her back.
H. James, Tragic Muse, xxxv.

weak-mindedness (wēk'mīn'ded-nes), n. The state or character of being weak-minded; irresolution; indecision.

In homical maniacal cases there may be melancholy or weak-mindedness from the outset and no maniacal excitement.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 449.

weakness (wēk'nes), n. [ME. weakenes, weykenesse; cf. AS. wēanys, weakness, < wac, weak; see weak and -ness.] The state or character of being weak, in any sense; also, a weak point.

Syn weakness of women may not woe stryve,
Ne have no might tawards men malistries to fond.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 323.

I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 276.

Weakness is a negative term, and imports the absence of strength. It is, besides, a relative term, and accordingly imports the absence of such a quantity of strength as makes the share possessed by the person in question less than that of some person he is compared to.

Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, vi. 8. note.

It is one of the prime weaknesses of a democracy to be satisfied with the second-best if it appear to answer the purpose tolerably well, and to be cheaper — as it never is in the long run.
Lowell, Harvard Anniversary, 1886.

weak-sighted (wēk'sī'ted), a. Having weak sight. A. Tucker.

weak-spirited (wēk'spīr'i-ted), a. Having a weak or timorous spirit; pusillanimous. Scott.

Cf. wealth.] 1. Wealth; riches; hence, prosperity; success; happiness; well-being; the state of being well or prosperous: as, come weal or woe.

Unwise is he that can no wels endure.

Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Bukton, l. 27.

And of this ye seide full trewe that moche wels and moche wo haue we sufred to-geider.

Mertin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 555.

In our olde vulgare, profite is called weale.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1.

I sing the happy Rusticks weal,

Whose handson house seems as a Common weal.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 3.

Glad I submit, who'er, or young or old,

Ought, more conducive to our weal, unfold.

Pope, Iliad, xiv. 119.

2†. The state: properly in the phrases common weal, public weal, general weal, meaning primarily 'the common or public welfare,' but used (the first now as a compound word) to designate the state (in which weal used alone is an abbreviation of commonweal).

A publike weale is a body luyng, compacte or made of sondry estates and degrees of men, whiche is disposed by the ordre of equite, and governed by the rule and moderation of reason.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1.

The charters that you bear

I' the body of the weal. Shak., Cor., ii. 3. 180.

The public, general, or common weal, the interest, well-being, or prosperity of the community, state, or society.

weal³†, n. Same as *weal*².

weal⁴ (wēl), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To be in woe or want. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] weal-balanced, a. An original misprint, in the following passage, of well-balanced, corrected by some editors, but retained by some, and absurdly explained as "balanced with regard to the common weal or good."

By cold gradation and weal-balanced form

We shall proceed with Angelo.

Shak., M. for M., iv. 3. 104.

Weald (wōld), n. [late ME. weald, appar. an irreg. form of wild (formerly pron. wild), early mod. E. wilde, wylde, found in same sense, confused by later writers with ME. wald, wold, wēld, < AS. weald, a forest; see *wold*¹. The proper E. form of AS. weald is wold (parallel with bold, fold, hold, sold, told, etc.). The mod. spelling weald represents the earlier weald, and has nothing to do with AS. weald, unless it is due to Verstegan, who affected the "restitution" of old forms.] 1. The name given in England to an oval-shaped area, bounded by a line topographically well marked by an escarpment of the Chalk, which begins at Folkestone Hill, near the Straits of Dover, and passes through the counties of Kent, Surrey, Hants, and Sussex, meeting the sea again at Beachy Head. It embraces the southwestern part of Kent, the southern part of Surrey, the north and northeastern half of Sussex, and a small part of the eastern side of Hampshire. These are the limits of the area now known to geologists as the Weald; but, according to the English Geological Survey, it is probable that the area anciently designated by that name was somewhat smaller than this, having been bounded by the escarpment of the Lower Greensand, which is approximately concentric with that of the Chalk, but higher and distant from five to ten miles from it. This latter escarpment is, however, in places rather ill-defined, so that there the boundary of the ancient Weald was doubtful. The geology of the Weald is extremely interesting, hence the name has become very familiar. The formations covering the Weald proper are known as the Wealden (which see). The Weald was originally partly covered with forests and partly destitute of them.

The Historie of this Hogheard, presenteth to my minde an opinion, that some men mainteine touching this Weald: which is that it was a great while together in manner nothing els but a desert, and waste Wilderness, not planted with Townes, or peopled with men, as the outskides of the shyre were, but stored and stuffed with herds of Deere, and droves of Hogs only. Which conceit, though happily it may seem to many but a Paradoxe, yet in mine owne fantasie, it wanteth not the feete of sound reason to stand upon.

Lambarde, A Perambulation of Kent (1596), p. 211.

We know that the Weald proper, or that part of the country below the Lower Greensand escarpment, was the part latest cultivated. Even as late as Elizabeth's time swine are said to have run wild here.

Topley, Geol. of the Weald, p. 308.

2. [l. c.] Any open country. [Rare, and mostly in poetry.]

But she to Almesbury

Fled all night long by glimmering waste and weald.

Tennyson, Guinevere.

Wealden (wēl'dn), a. and n. [Irreg. < Weald + -en.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Weald.

II. n. In geol., the name of a formation extensively developed in the Weald of England (see Weald), and interesting from its position and organic remains. Its geological age is Lower Cretaceous. The deposits of the Wealden, which have a total thickness of 1,800 feet, precisely resemble those of a modern delta, and the organic remains include land-plants, fresh-water shells, and few estuarine or marine forms, as also dinosaurs, plesiosaurs, and pterodactyls. The Wealden is separated into two divisions: the Weald Clay, at the top, about 1,000 feet thick, and the Haslingden Sand group beneath, which is subdivided, in descending order, as follows: Tunbridge Wells Sand, 120 to 180 feet thick; Wadhurst Clay, 120 to 180 feet; and Ashdown Sand, 400 to 500 feet. The Wealden is overlain conformably by the Lower Greensand.

wealdish† (wēl'dish), a. [< Weald, the Weald, + -ish.] Of or belonging to a weald, especially [cap.] to the Weald of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex.

The Wealdish men. Fuller, Worthies, Kent, II. 111.

wealful† (wēl'fūl), a. [< ME. welful, weoleful; < *weal*¹ + -ful.] Successful; prosperous; happy; joyous; felicitous.

For thow ne wost what is the ende of thinges, forthy domestow that felonos and wykked men ben mylty and wealful.
Chaucer, Boethius, l. prose 6.

To tell the jekes with joy that joy do bring

Is both a wealeful and a woful thing.

Davies, Holy Rode, p. 13. (Davies.)

wealfulness† (wēl'fūl-nes), n. [< ME. welfulnesse; < wealful + -ness.] Prosperity; success; happiness.

Grant her in health and wealth long to live.

Book of Common Prayer (Eng.), Prayer for the Queen.

2. Riches; valuable material possessions; that which serves, or the aggregate of those things which serve, a useful or desired purpose, and cannot be acquired without a sacrifice of labor, capital, or time; especially, large possessions; abundance of worldly estate; affluence; opulence.

It shall then be given out that I'm a gentlewoman of such a birth, such a wealth, have had such a breeding, and so forth.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, l. 2.

Get place and wealth — if possible, with grace;

If not, by any means, get wealth and place.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 103.

Wealth, in all commercial states, is found to accumulate.

Goldsmith, Vicar, xix.

Things for which nothing could be obtained in exchange, however useful or necessary they may be, are not wealth in the sense in which the term is used in Political Economy.

J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., Prelim. Rem.

Senior, again, has admirably defined wealth, or objects possessing value, as "those things, and those things only, which are transferable, are limited in supply, and are directly or indirectly productive of pleasure or preventive of pain."

Jecons, The Theory of Polit. Econ., p. 176.

3. Affluence; profusion; abundance.

Again the feast, the speech, the glee,

The shade of passing thought, the wealth

Of words and wit.

Vices, Instruction of a Christian Woman, li. 2.

wealthily (wel'thi-lī), adv. In a wealthy manner; in the midst of wealth; richly.

I come to live it wealthily in Padua;

If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 75.

wealthiness (wel'thi-nes), n. [Early mod. E. weltheines; < wealthy + -ness.] The state of being wealthy; wealth.

The Fosterer vp of shoting is Labour, companion of virtue, the maynteyner of honestie, the encrease of health and wealthiness. Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. Arber), p. 52.

It is a more sound wealthiness for a man to esteeme him selfe wise than to presume to be of great wealth; for with wisdom they obtayne to hane, but with hauing they come to lose themselves.

Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 101.

wealthy (wel'thi), a. [Early mod. E. welthy, welthe; < wealth + -y.] 1. Having wealth; rich; having large possessions; opulent; affluent.

Married to a wealthy widow.

Shak., T. of the S., iv. 2. 37.

2. Rich in any sense, as in beauty, ornament, endowments, etc.; enriched.

Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

Ps. lxxvi. 12.

Her dowry wealthy.

Shak., T. of the S., iv. 5. 65.

'Twas a tough Task, believe it, thus to tame A wild and wealthy Language, and to frame Grammatic Tolls to curb her, so that she Now speaks by Rules, and sings by Prosody.

Howell, Letters, i. v. 26.

Revealings deep and clear are thine Of wealthy smiles.

Tennyson, Madeline.

3. Well-fed; in good condition. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.] = syn. 1. Moneyed, well off, well to do.

wean, n. An obsolete form of wean.

wean (wēn), v. t. [Formerly also wain; < ME. weanen, < AS. weanian (ger-weanian, accustom, also wean, ā-weanian, wean) = D. wennen, accustom (ge-wennen, accustom, inure, af-wennen, wean), = OHG. wenjan, wennen, wenen, MHG. wenchen, accustom (OHG. weaponry (wep'on-ri), n. [< weapon + -ry (see -cry).] Weapons in general. [Rare.]

weapon-salve (wep'on-sälv), n. A salve which was supposed to cure a wound by being applied to the weapon that made it. According to Sir Kenelm Digby, the salve produces sympathy between the wound and the weapon; he cites several instances to prove that "as the sword is treated the wound inflicted by it feels. Thus, if the instrument is kept wet, the wound will feel cool; if held to the fire, it will feel hot," etc. This superstition is referred to in the following lines:

She has ta'en the broken lance,

And washed it from the clothed gore,

And saved the splinter o'er and o'er.

Scott, L. of I. M., iii. 23.

weapon-smith (wep'on-smith), n. One who makes weapons of war; an armorer. [Rare.]

It is unavoidable that the first mechanics—beyond the heretical weapon-smith on the one hand, and on the other the poor professors of such rude arts as the homestead cannot do without— . . . should be those who have no land.

Few portions of Spanish literature show anything more stiff and wearisome than the long declamations and discussions in this dull fiction.

Ticknor, Span. Lit., III. 88.

=Syn. Wearisome, Fatiguing, Tiresome, Tedious, Irksome, prolix, humdrum, prosy, dull. Wearisome and fatiguing are essentially the same in meaning and strength; they are equally appropriate whether the person acts or is acted upon: as, the old man was so deaf that it was equally wearisome (or fatiguing) to speak and to be spoken to. Wearisome is more often used where one is acted upon; in strength it is the same as wearysome. Tedious is stronger than wearisome, and suggests the need of constant effort of the will to do or to endure; the weariness may be physical or mental: as, a tedious task; a tedious headache; tedious garrulity. Tedious suggests commonly that one is acted upon; irksome suggests that one acts or is called upon to act, and implies also a peculiar reluctance. In Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 56, is an example of the rarer use of irksome to express a wearied shrinking from being acted upon: "How irksome is this music to my heart!" See fatigue, n., and tirel, v. t.

wearisomely (wēr'i-sum-li), adv. In a wearisome manner; tediously; so as to cause weariness.

2. Impatient or discontented with the continuance of something painful, exacting, irksome, or distasteful, and willing to be done with it; having ceased to feel pleasure (in something).

In the exercise and study of the mind they be never weary. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Weary of the world, away she hies, And yokes her silver doves. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1189.

I think she is weary of your tyranny, And therefore gone. Fletcher, Pilgrim, ii. 1.

He is weary of the old wooden houses, the mud and dust, the dead level of site and sentiment, the chill east wind, and the chilliest of social atmospheres. Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 11.

3. Causing fatigue; tiresome; irksome: as, a weary journey; a weary life.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 133.

Their dusty palfreys and array Showed they had marched a weary way. Scott, Marmion, l. 8.

Most weary seem'd the sea, weary the oar, Weary the wandering fields of barren foam. Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters.

4. Feeble; sickly; puny. Forby; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] = syn. Diagusted, wearisome. See *weary*¹, v.

weary¹ (wēr'i), v.; pret. and pp. wearied, ppr. wearying. [< ME. wērian, < AS. wērigean, ge-wērigean, weary, fatigue, < wērig, weary: see *weary*¹, a.] I. trans. 1. To make weary; reduce or exhaust the physical strength or endurance of; fatigue; tire: as, to weary one's self with striving.

The people shall weary themselves for very vanity. Hab. ii. 13.

They in the practice of their religion wearied chiefly their knees and hands, we especially our ears and tongues. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

2. To exhaust the endurance, patience, or resistance of, as by persistence or importunity.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 24.

I have even wearied heaven with prayers.

Ford, 'Tis Pity, l. 3.

Watchful I'll guard thee, and with Midnight Prayer Weary the Gods to keep thee in their Care.

Prior, Henry and Emma.

To weary out. (a) To exhaust or subdue by something fatiguing or irksome.

Like an Egyptian Tyrant, some Thou weariest out in building but a Tomb. Cowley, The Mistress, Thraldom.

She surceased not, day nor night, To storm me over-watch'd and wearied out. Milton, S. A., l. 405.

(b) To pass wearily. [Rare.]

The land of Italy: There will I walle, and weary out my dayes in wo. The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 329).

= syn. 1. Fatigue, Jade, etc. See tirel.

II. intrans. 1. To become weary, tired, or fatigued.

She was nae ten miles frae the town, When she began to weary. Lizae Baillie (Child's Ballads, IV. 74).

2. To become impatient or surfeited, as with the continuance of something that is monotonous, irksome, or distasteful.

Sing the simple passage o'er and o'er For all an April morning, till the ear Wearies to hear it. Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. To long; languish: with for before the object.

The pair took home schoolboy meals in paper-bags, subsisting upon buns and canned meats, and wearying for the taste of a hot broiled steak. The Century, XXXVII. 775.

weary² (wēr'i), n. [*< *weary*², v., var. of *wary*², curse: see *wary*².] A curse: used now only in the phrases Weary fa' you! Weary on you! and the like. Scotch. [Scotch.]

weasand (wē'zand), n. [Also weazand, and formerly wesand, wezand, also dial. wēzen, wizen, wizen, and wosen; < ME. wesand, wesande, way-sande, wesaunt, < AS. wēsend, also wāsend (> E. dial. wōsen) = OFries. wāsende, wāsende, wesand, windpipe, = OHG. wēsunt, MHG. wēsant (E. Müller), weasand; cf. G. dial. (Bav.) waisel, wasel, wasling, the gullet of ruminating animals. The word (AS. wāsend) has the form of a present participle, and some have attempted to connect it with weeze; this involves the assumption that the rare AS. verb hwēsan (pret. hwōs), weeze, = Icel. hwesa, hisa, = Dan. hwæse, hise, weeze (not found in OHG., etc.), gave rise to a noun hwēsend*, varying to hwāsand*, hwāsend*, meaning 'the wheezing thing,' that this name was applied to all windpipes (most of which never wheeze), and that subsequently the initial consonant in hw fell away, a phenomenon wholly unknown in other AS. words in hw-, and not recognized even in mod. English except in dialectal use.] The windpipe; the pipe or tube through which air passes to and from the lungs in respiration; the trachea. See *trachea*¹ and larynx:

Should I have namod him? Nay, they should as soon have this weasand of mine.

Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

Had his weasand bene a little widdier. Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

Give me a razor there, that I may scrape his weasand, that the bristles may not hinder me when I come to cut it. Dryden, The Mock Astrologer, V. i.

You may have a pot of porter, or two—but neither wine nor spirits shall wet your wizen this night, Tickler. Noctes Ambrosianae, Feb., 1832.

wease-allan (wōz'al'an), n. See wesce-allen.

weasel (wō'zəl), n. [Formerly also weazel, wesel; < ME. wesel, wezele, wezle, < AS. wesle = D. wesl, wesle (dim. wesolke, wezelje) = OHG. wisala, MHG. wisel, wisele, G. wiesel = Icel. vísla (in comp. hreyri-vísla) = Sw. vesla, väsäla = Dan. væsel, a weasel; origin uncertain.] 1. A small carnivorous digitigrade mammal of the restricted genus Putorius, of the family Mustelidae, related to the stoat or ermine, ferret, and polecat of the same genus, and less intimately to the marten or sable of the genus Mustela of the same family. The species to which the name is most frequently or especially applied is P. vulgaris, the common weasel of Europe and of most of the cold and temperate parts of the northern hemisphere, distinguished by the comparative length and extreme slenderness of the body, and very small size, being only some 6 or 8 inches long, with a tail of 2 inches in length, or less; the color is reddish-brown above, and white below; the tail is of the same color as the body, and not tipped with black. In northerly regions it turns white in winter, like the ermine. It feeds on rats, mice, moles, shrews, small birds and their eggs, and insects; and, though itself classed as vermin by gamekeepers, it is often serviceable as a destroyer of vermin in ricks, barns, and granaries, its small size and lithe, sinuous body enabling it to penetrate almost everywhere. Its cunning and wariness are proverbial in the expression to catch a weasel asleep—that is, to do an extremely difficult thing by strategy, finesse, or unexpected action. Other species of Putorius, properly called weasels, inhabit most parts of the world, and the name has loosely attached to various animals of different families, some of which applications are noted in phrases below.

Fair was this yonge wyf, and therewithal As any wezele hir body gent and smal. Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 48.

A weasel tame have sum men thar crepe, Hem forto take. Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 100.

I can suck melancholy out of a song as a weasel sucks eggs. Shak., As you Like it, ii. 5. 13.

2†. The weasel-coot.—3. A lean, mean, sneaking, greedy fellow.

The weasel Scot Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs. Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 170.

Four-toed weaselt, the African zenil or suricate, a viverrine, formerly Rhizomys tetradactyla. See cut under suricate.—Malacca weasel. Same as rasai. See cut under Viverrinae.—Mexican weasel. Same as Kinkajou (which see, with cut).—Pouched weasel. See pouched, and cut under Phascogale.

weasel-cat (wē'zəl-kat), n. The linsang, Prionodon gracilis. See cut under delundung.

weasel-coot (wē'zəl-kōt), n. The so-called red-headed snow. This is the female or young male of Mergellus snowii (the adult male of which is figured under snow). The implication of the term weasel appears to be the musteline or foxy color of the head. An old name of this or a similar merganser was Mergus mustelinus, and one used by Sir T. Browne was Mustela variegata. The same adjective with the same meaning occurs in Turdus mustelinus, the present name of the wood-thrush of the United States, and in several other specific designations of animals, as in Lepilemur mustelinus, the weasel-mur. Compare weaser.

weasel-duck (wē'zəl-duk), n. Same as weasel-coot.

weasel-faced (wē'zəl-fāst), a. Having a thin, sharp face like a weasel's. Steele.

weasel-fish (wē'zəl-fish), n. The three-bearded rockling, or whistle-fish. See whistle-fish.

weasel-lemur (wē'zəl-lēm'ér), n. A small lemur, Lepilemur mustelinus.

weaselling, n. [Also wēazelling; *< weasel + ling*¹.] A kind of rockling, probably the five-bearded, Motella mustela.

weaselmonger (wē'zəl-mung'gér), n. A rat-catcher; one who hunts rats, etc., with weasels.

This weaselmonger, who is no better than a cat in a house, or a ferret in a conygart [rabbit-burrow]. Peele, Speeches to Queen Elizabeth at Theobalds, ii.

weasel-snout (wē'zəl-snout), n. The yellow dead-nettle, Lamium Galeobdolon: so called from the shape of the corolla. See Galeobdolon.

weasel-spider (wē'zəl-spī'dér), n. A book-name of any arachnid of the family Galeodidae. See cut under Solpugida.

weaser (wē'zér), n. [Cf. weasel-coot.] The American merganser or sheldrake, Mergus americanus. J. P. Girard, 1844; G. Trumbull, 1888. Also wheaser and weezer. [Long Isl. and.]

weasiness (wē'zi-nēs), n. The state or condition of being weasy. Joye.

weasy (wē'zi), a. [Appar. for weasy*, a dial. var. of woosy, an earlier form of oozy (like weese, woose, for ooze).] Gluttonous; sensual. Joye.

weather (we'th'ér), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also wether; with alteration of orig. d to th (as also in father, mother, prob. under Scand. influence; cf. Icel. veðr), < ME. wēder, wēdr, < AS. wēder, weather, wind, = OS. wēdar, wēder = OFries. wēder = D. wēder, contracted wēer = OHG. wetar, MHG. weter, G. wetter (cf. also G. ge-witter, a storm) = Icel. veðr = Sw. räder, wind, air, weather, = Dan. veir, weather, wind, air (not found in Goth.). Cf. OBulg. vedro, good weather, vedrū, bright, clear; cf. also OBulg. rietrū, air, wind; akin to wind, from the root of Common Weasel (Putorius vulgaris).

Goth. watan, Skt. $\sqrt{v\bar{a}}$, blow: see *wind*².] I. n.
1. Wind; storm; tempest.

Now welcome sower, with thy sunne softe,
That hast this wintres wedre overshake.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 685.

Aye the wynde was in the saylo,
Over fumes they flet withouthyn fayle,
The wethur then forth gan swepe,
Le Bone Florence (Ritson's Metr. Rom., III.).

What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud
My thoughts prease!
Dryden, Æneid, v. 19.

2. Cold and wet.

Seynge this bysshop with his company syttyng in the weder, deayred hym to his howse. Fabyan, Chron., lxxxiii.

And, if two Boots keep out the Weather,
What need you have two Hides of Leather?
Prior, Alma, III.

3. A light rain; a shower. Wyclif, Deut. xxxii.
2.—4. The state of the air or atmosphere with respect to its cloudiness, humidity, motions, pressure, temperature, electrical condition, or any other meteorological phenomena; the atmospheric conditions prevailing at any moment over any region of the earth: as, warm or cold weather; wet or dry weather; calm or stormy weather; fair or foul weather; cloudy or hazy weather. The investigation of the various causes which determine the state of the atmosphere and produce the changes which incessantly taking place in its condition forms the subject of meteorology. The average condition of the weather for a considerable period constitutes climate, and the statistical compilation of meteorological observations forms the basis of climatology.

Men may see the Walles when it is faye Wedre and cleer.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 101.

A! lorde, what the weder is colde!
The foldest freese that euere I feyld.
York Plays, p. 114.

They . . . wolde ride in the cole of the mornynge that was fole and stille and a softe weder, and thei were yonge and tender to suffre greke traulye.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), II. 191.

Gentlewomen, the weather's hot; whither walk you?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, II. 1.

Horrible weather again to-day, snowing and raining all day.
Sydney Smith, To Mrs. Sydney Smith.

5. Specifically, in weather-maps and -reports, the condition of the sky as to cloudiness and the occurrence of precipitation.—6. Change of the state of the atmosphere; meteorological change; hence, figuratively, vicissitude; change of fortune or condition.

It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle . . . not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient noble family which hath stood against the waves and weathers of time!

But my Substantial Love
Of a more firm and perfect Nature is;
No Weathers can it move.
Convey, The Mistress, Coldness.

7. The inclination or obliquity of the sails of a windmill to the plane of revolution.—Angle of weather. See *angle*³.—Clerk of the weather. See clerk.—Merry weather. See merry.—Soft weather. (a) A thaw. (New Eng. J.) (b) An enervating atmosphere.—To make fair weather, to conciliate or flatter, as by fair words and shows of friendship.

I must make fair weather yet awhile,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 30.

To make good or bad weather (naut.). See *make*¹.—Under the weather, indisposed; ill; ailing: a condition caused or influenced by the state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Since I went to Washington, and until within ten days, I have been quite under the weather, and I have had to neglect everything.
S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 49.

Weather Bureau, a bureau of the Department of Agriculture, having charge of the forecasting of weather, the issue of storm-warnings, the display of weather- and flood-signals, the gaging and reporting of rivers, the maintenance of sea-coast telegraph-lines, the collection and transmission of marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, the taking of meteorological observations for establishing the climatic conditions of the United States, and the distribution of meteorological information. From 1871 to 1891 these duties were performed by the signal service of the army, which during that period was popularly called the Weather Bureau.—Weather-signal. See signal.

II. a. Naut., toward the wind; windward; opposed to lee: as, weather bow; weather beam; weather rigging.—Weather anchor, the anchor, lying to windward, by which a ship rides when moored.—Weather helm, quarter, tide. See the nouns.

Weather (weθ'ér), v. [ME. wederen, < AS. wæderian, wædran, expose to the air, indicate the weather; cf. AS. wædran = Sw. vädra, expose to the air, air, scent, smell, sniff the air, = Dan. vejre, air, scent; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To air; expose to the air; dry or otherwise affect by exposure to the open air. [Rare.]

I fear me this land is not yet ripe to be ploughed; for, as the saying is, it lacketh weathering.

Lutimer, Sermon of the Plough.
And then he searheth on some branch thereby,
To weather him, and his myost wyls to dry.
Spenser, Mulopotmos, l. 184.

All barleys that have been weathered in the field, or have got mow-burnt or musty in the stack, should be rigidly rejected.

Ure, Dict., III. 185.

Hawks are weathered by being placed unhooded in the open air. This term is applied to passage hawks which are not sufficiently reclaimed to be left out by themselves unhooded on blocks—they are weathered by being put out for an hour or two under the falconer's eye.

Encyc. Brit., IX. 7.

2. To affect injuriously by the action of weather; in geol., to discolor or disintegrate: as, the atmospheric agencies that weather rocks.—3. In tile-manuf., to expose (the clay) to a hot sun or to frost, in order to open the pores and separate the particles, that it may readily absorb water and be easily worked.—4. To slope (a surface), that it may shed water.—5. Naut.: (a) To sail to windward of: as, to weather a point or cape.

We weathered Pulo Pare on the 29th, and stood in for the main.
Cook, First Voyage, III. 13.

(b) To bear up against and come safely through: said of a ship in a storm, as also of a mariner; hence, used in the same sense with reference to storms on land.

Here's to the pilot that weathered the storm. Canning.

Among these hills, from first to last,
We've weathered many a furious blast.
Wordsworth, The Waggoner, II.

I weathered some weary snow-storms.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 275.

To sell the boat—and yet he loved her well;
How many a rough sea had he weathered in her!
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

6. Figuratively, to bear up against and overcome, as trouble or danger; come out of, as a trial, without permanent damage or loss.

You will weather the difficulties yet. F. W. Robertson.

The vitality and self-direction of the semi-Greek municipalities of the East in large measure weathered Roman rule, as did also the Greek speech and partially Hellenized life of Asia, Syria, and Egypt. W. Wilson, State, § 143.

To weather a point, to gain an advantage or accomplish a purpose against opposition.—To weather out, to hold out against to the end.

When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weathered out the storm that beats upon us.
Addison, Cato, III. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To suffer a change, such as discoloration or more or less complete disintegration, in consequence of exposure to the weather or atmosphere. See weathering, 2.

The lowest bed is a sandstone with ferruginous veins; it weathers into an extraordinary honey-combed mass.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, II. 426.

The granite commenced to weather, and weathered meretriciously on in spite of all technical and scientific commissions.
Science, VII. 75.

2. To resist or bear exposure to the weather.

For outside work, boiled oil is used, because it weathers better than raw oil. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 436.

weather-beaten (weθ'ér-bé'tn), a. [weather + beaten. In some of its uses perhaps a perverted spelling of weather-bitten, q. v.] Beaten or marred by the weather; seasoned or hardened by exposure to all kinds of weather: as, a weather-beaten sailor.

She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
As weather-beaten ship arry'd on haply shore.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 2.

Summer being ended, all things stand in appearance with a weather-beaten face.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 35.

The weather-beaten form of the scout.

The old shepherd . . . stands by, like a weather-bitten condut of many kings' reigns.
Shak., W. T., v. 2. 60.

weather-blown (weθ'ér-blōn), a. Weather-beaten; weather-stained. Chapman, Iliad, II. 532.

weather-board (weθ'ér-bōrd), n. [= Icel. vetherborth, the windward side; as weather + board.] 1. Naut.: (a) That side of a ship which is toward the wind; the windward side. (b) A piece of plank placed in a ship's port when she is laid up in ordinary, inclined so as to turn off rain without preventing the circulation of air.—2. A board used in weatherboarding.

weather-board (weθ'ér-bōrd), v. t. [weather-board, n.] To nail boards upon, as a roof or wall, lapping one over another, in order to turn off rain, snow, etc.

It was a building of four rooms, constructed of hewn logs and weather-boarded at the joints.

The Century, XXXVIII. 408.

weather-boarding (weθ'ér-bōr'ding), n. 1. A facing of thin boards, having usually a feather-edge, and nailed lapping one over another, used as an outside covering for the walls of a wooden building. They are practically the same as clapboards, but are distinguished from those by being larger and wider.—2. The finish or woodwork at the base of a clapboarded wall.—3. The whole exterior covering of a wall or roof, whether of weather-boards, clapboards, or shingles.—Weather-boarding clamp, gage, saw, etc., special forms of clamp, gage, saw, etc., used in applying or cutting out weather-boarding.

weather-bound (weθ'ér-bound), a. Delayed by bad weather.

weather-box (weθ'ér-boks), n. A form of hygroscope, in the shape of a toy-house, which roughly indicates weather changes by the appearance or retirement of toy images. In a common form a man advances from his porch in wet and a woman in dry weather—the movement being produced by the varying torsion of a hygroscopic string by which the images are attached. Also called weather-house.

The elder and younger son of the house of Crawley were, like the gentleman and lady in the weather-box, never at home together.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, x.

weather-breeder (weθ'ér-brē'dér), n. A fine serene day which precedes and prepares a storm.

"It's a beautiful day," said Whittaker. . . . "Yea, nice day," growled Adams, "but a weather-breeder."
E. Eggleston, Roxy, xiii.

weather-cast (weθ'ér-kást), n. A forecast of the weather. [Rare.]

Admiral FitzRoy, in 1860, was enabled, aided by the electric telegraph, to inaugurate a system of storm-warnings and weather-casts.
R. Strachan, in Modern Meteorology, p. 84.

weather-caster (weθ'ér-kás'tér), n. One who computes the weather for almanacs. Halliwel.

weather-cloth (weθ'ér-klōth), n. Naut.: (a) A covering of painted canvas for hammocks, boats, etc. (b) A tarpaulin placed in the weather rigging to make a shelter for officers and men on watch.

weathercock (weθ'ér-kok), n. [ME. weder-cok, wedyroocke, weddyrooke, wederroc, so called because the figure of a cock, as an emblem of vigilance, has from a very early time been a favorite form for vanes; cf. D. weerhaan = Sw. väderhane = Dan. veirhane, a weathercock, etc. (D. haan, etc., a cock).] 1. A vane or weather-vane; a pointing device, set on the top of a spire or other elevation, and turning with the wind, thus showing its direction. See cut under vane.

O jest unseen, inscrutable, inviolable,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weather-cock on a steeple!
Shak., T. G. of V., II. i. 142.

They are Men whose Conditions are subject to more Revolutions than a Weather Cock, or the Uncertain Mind of a Fantastical Woman.
Ward, London Spy.

His head . . . looked like a weather-cock, perched upon his spindle neck to tell which way the wind blew.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 420.

2. Figuratively, any thing or person that is easily and frequently turned or swayed; a fickle or inconstant person.

What pretty weathercocks these women are!
Randolph, Amaryllas, l. 1.

The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's, that weather-cock of state.
Dryden, Conquest of Granada, I. III. 1.

weather-cross (weθ'ér-krōs), n. In telegraph- and telephone-lines, a leakage from one line to another, caused by poor insulation, and brought about by wet or stormy weather.

weather-dog (weθ'ér-dog), n. A fragmentary rainbow, popularly believed, especially in Cornwall, to be an indication of rain. [Prov. Eng.]

weather-driven (weθ'ér-driv'n), a. [= Sw. väder-drifren, wind-driven; as weather + driven.] Driven by winds or storms; forced by stress of weather.

weathered (weθ'érd), p. a. 1. Discolored or disintegrated by the action of the elements:

said sometimes of surfaces of wood, but oftener of stones or rocks. Trees which show signs of having suffered from exposure to the weather, as many old ones do, are sometimes said to be weather-beaten, but rarely, if ever, to be weathered. See weathering, 2.

The bands of stratification . . . can be distinguished in many places, especially in Navarin Island, but only on the weathered surfaces of the slate.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, II. 448.

The force of the wind is such as actually to loosen the weathered parts of the rock and dislodge them.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, II.

2. Seasoned by exposure to the air or the weather.—3. In arch., having a slope or inclination to prevent the lodgment of water: noting surfaces approximately or theoretically horizontal, as those of window-sills, the tops of cornices, and the upper surface of flat stone-work.

weather-eye (weð'ér-i), n. The eye imagined to be specially used for the purpose of observing the sky in order to forecast the weather.—To keep one's weather-eye open or awake, to be on one's guard; have one's wits about one. [Colloq.]

Keep your weather-eye awake, and don't make any more acquaintances, however handsome.

Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, II. 5.

weather-fend (weð'ér-fend), v. t. [< weather + fend.] To shelter; defend from the weather. [Rare.]

The line-grove which weather-fends your cell.

Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 10.

weather-fish (weð'ér-fish), n. The mud-fish, thunder-fish, or misgurn of Europe, Misgurnus fossilis: regarded as a weather-prophet because it is supposed to come out of the mud, in which it habitually burrows, before a storm.

weather-gage (weð'ér-gáj), n. 1. Naut., the advantage of the wind; the position of a ship when she is to windward of another ship: opposed to lee-gage.

A ship is said to have the weather-gage of another when she is at the windward of her.

Admiral Smyth.

Hence—2. Advantage of position; the upper hand.

Were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate!

Scott, Rokeby, vi. 24.

To dispute the weather-gage. See dispute.

weather-gall (weð'ér-gál), n. Same as water-gall, 2.

weather-glass (weð'ér-glás), n. [= D. weerglas = Sw. väderglas = Dan. veirglas, barometer; as weather + glass.] An instrument designed to indicate the state of the atmosphere. This word is commonly applied to the barometer, but also to other instruments for measuring atmospheric changes and indicating the state of the weather, as the thermometer and various kinds of hygrometers.

The King of Spain's health is the Weather-glass upon which all our politicians look; as that rises or falls, we look pleasant or uneasy.

Prior (Ellis's Lit. Letters), p. 265.

Shepherd's or poor man's weather-glass. See shepherd.

weather-gleam (weð'ér-glēm), n. A peculiar appearance of clear sky near the horizon. [Prov. Eng.]

You have marked the lightning of the sky just above the horizon when clouds are about to break up and disappear. Whatever name you gave it, you would hardly improve on that of the weather-gleam, which in some of our dialects it bears.

Trench. (Imp. Dict.)

weather-hardened (weð'ér-här'dnd), a. Hardened by the weather; weather-beaten.

A countenance which, weather-hardened as it was, might have given the painter a model for a Patriarch.

Southey, The Doctor, ix.

weather-head (weð'ér-hed), n. 1. A secondary rainbow. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Stripes of cirrus cloud. [Scotch.]

weather-headed (weð'ér-hed'ed), a. Same as wether-headed.

Sir, is this usage for your son?—for that old weather-headed fool, I know how to laugh at him; but you, Sir—

Congreve, Love for Love, II. 7. (Davies.) weather-house (weð'ér-hous), n. Same as weather-box. Couper, Task, i. 211.

weathering (weð'ér-ing), n. [< ME. wederyng; verbal n. of weather, v.] 1. Weather, especially favorable or fair weather.

For all trowe shipmen, and trowe pilgrymes, yat Godd for his grace yeue hem wederyng and passage, yat yel mowen sauely comen and gone.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

Which would have bene, with the weathering which we had, ten or twelve dayes worke.

Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 515.

2. In geol., etc., the action of the elements in changing the color, texture, or composition of rock, in rounding off its edges, or gradually disintegrating it. The first effect of the weathering of rock-surfaces is discoloration. This arises in part from dust or dirt finding its way into the fissures, and is most quickly seen in large cities where much coal is burned. Discoloration often arises from the oxidation of some sulphur compound which the rock contains, and especially of iron pyrites, which is a widely disseminated mineral. Another very perceptible effect of weathering is the loss of the luster which many rock-constituents naturally have. This is particularly conspicuous in the case of feldspar, and is the result of incipient decomposition and hydration. Rounding of the edges of angular projections of the rock, or of its constituents, is another result of weathering, the decomposed minerals being more easily removed by the action of water than they were before decomposition. Weathering is a preliminary to erosion, but the rapidity with which these operations are carried on varies greatly with the nature of the rock and the climatic and other conditions to which it is subjected.

Many of them [nodules of various kinds] are, also, externally marked in the same direction with parallel ridges and furrows, which have not been produced by weathering.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, I. 78.

3. In arch., a slight inclination given to an approximately horizontal surface to enable it to throw off water.

weathering-stock (weð'ér-ing-stok), n. A post to which hawks are leashed in such a manner as to allow them limited exercise. See last quotation under weather, v. t., 1.

E'en like the hawk (whose keeper's wary hands Have made a prisoner to her weather-ring stock).

Quarles, Emblems, V. ix. 5.

weatherliness (weð'ér-li-nes), n. 1. Weatherly character or qualities: said of ships and boats.

To combine the speed of the ordinary type of American sloop with the weatherliness of the English cutter.

Science, VI. 108.

2. Naut., the state of a vessel as to her capacity to ply speedily and quickly to windward.

weatherly (weð'ér-li), a. [< weather + -ly.]

Naut., making very little leeway when close-hauled, even in a stiff breeze and heavy sea: noting a ship or boat.

Notwithstanding her weatherly qualities, the heavy cross sea, as she drove into it, headed her off bodily.

M. Scott, Tom Cringle's Log, viii.

weather-map (weð'ér-map), n. A map showing the temperature, pressure, wind, weather, and other meteorological elements over an extensive region, compiled from simultaneous observations at a large number of stations. The pressure is represented by isobars, the temperature by isotherms, the wind by arrows, and the weather by differently shaded circles or other conventional symbols. Weather-maps, prepared once or twice daily, form the basis upon which every government weather-service forecasts the weather and issues storm-warnings.

weather-molding (weð'ér-möl'ding), n. Same as dripline, 1.

weathermost (weð'ér-möst), a. superl. [< weather + -most.] Furthest to windward.

weather-notation (weð'ér-nō-tā'shōn), n. A system of abbreviation for the principal meteorological phenomena. Beaufort's weather-notation, which is used in Great Britain, is as follows: b, blue sky, whether clear or hazy; c, clouds (detached); d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, very gloomy; h, hail; i, lightning; m, mist; o, overcast; p, passing, temporary showers; q, squally; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u, ugly, threatening weather; w, dew.

weather-plant (weð'ér-plant), n. The Indian licorice, Abrus precatorius: so named in view of an alleged property of indicating the weather in advance. It is a common tropical twining shrub (see Abrus), having pinnate leaves with from 20 to 40 small leaflets. Recent careful observations show that the pairs of leaflets fold together more or less as the light is stronger or weaker, the movement being less vigorous in a moister atmosphere; that a certain wrinkling of the surface co-exists with a coloring of the margin likely to be due to the attacks of an insect; and that the movement of the rachis, supposed to be barometric, is a diurnal oscillation which varies in extent with the amount of light. The temperature also affects the freedom of those motions. These characteristics are all paralleled in other plants, especially of the Lepuminoæ. As a means of forecasting, the plant is not likely to be of practical worth.

weather-proof (weð'ér-prōf), a. Proof against rough weather.

Lord, thou hast given me a cell

Wherein to dwell,

A little house, whose humble roof

Is weather-proof.

Herrick, A Thanksgiving to God for his House.

There were only ten persons at the conference meeting last night, and seven of them were women; he wonders how many weather-proof Christians there are in the parish.

C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 72.

weather-prophet (weð'ér-prof'et), n. [= Dan. veir-profet; as weather + prophet.] 1. One who foretells weather; one skilled in foreseeing the changes or state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Who that has read Greek does not know the humour with which the meteorological theories of the Athenian weather-prophets are ridiculed by Aristophanes in "The Clouds"? R. H. Scott, in Modern Meteorology, p. 166.

2. Anything in nature which serves as an indicator of weather changes, as a bird whose regular periodicity of migration or suddenness of appearance may indicate meteorological changes inappreciable by man.

Swallows have long been held for weather-prophets, and with reason enough in the quick response of their organization to the influence of atmospheric changes.

Coues, Birds of the Colorado Valley (1878), I. 372.

3. A device for foretelling changes in the weather. In most forms materials are employed which are so affected by dampness as to move some indicator, as a pair of figures, of which one appears or advances in dry and the other in wet weather. Other forms employ materials which change color according to the state of the atmosphere. Compare weather-box.

weather-report (weð'ér-rē-pōrt'), n. A daily report of meteorological observations and of probable changes in the weather, especially one issued by a weather-service. [Colloq.]

weather-roll (weð'ér-rōl), n. The roll of a ship to windward, in a heavy sea on the beam: opposed to lee lurch.

weather-service (weð'ér-sér'vis), n. An institution organized for taking meteorological observations in accordance with a systematic plan, and for utilizing the data thus collected by forecasting the weather, issuing warnings of storms and floods, publishing climatological tables, distributing information as to the effect of the weather on growing crops, and by allied services. All the principal governments of the world now maintain a weather-service, upon which a part or all of these duties are imposed. In the United States an annual appropriation of nearly a million dollars is made to the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, which is charged with performing these services. In addition to the Weather Bureau, and cooperating with it, there is organized in nearly every State a State weather-service, composed of voluntary observers whose work is directed toward giving information upon the condition of the crops as affected by the weather, and in general toward extending knowledge of local climatology.

weather-shore (weð'ér-shōr), n. The shore from which the wind blows.

[The wind] set so violently as rais'd on the sudden so greate a sea that we could not recover the weather-shore for many houres.

Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 11, 1644.

weather-sign (weð'ér-sin), n. Any phenomenon or sensation indicating state or change of weather; hence, generally, any prognostic or sign.

I am not old for nothing; I can tell
The weather-signs of love; you love this man.

Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, II.

weather-spy (weð'ér-spi), n. One who foretells the weather; a weather-prophet. Donne. [Rare.]

weather-stain (weð'ér-stān), n. [< weather + stain.] A stain or discoloration left or produced by the weather or by weathering.

Walls must get the weather-stain
Before they grow the ivy.

Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, viii.

He . . . felt that the shape and colour of every roof and weather-stain and broken hillock was good, because his growing senses had been fed on them.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, III. 9.

With weather-stains upon the wall,
And stairways worn, and crazy doors.

Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

weather-stained (weð'ér-stānd), a. Stained or discolored by the weather. See weathering, 2.

A tomb somewhat weather-stained. Longfellow.

weather-station (weð'ér-stā'shōn), n. A station where daily meteorological observations are made and reported to a central office; one of the stations of a weather-service.

weather-strip (weð'ér-strip), n. A slender strip of some material intended to keep out wind and cold; originally, a strip of wood covered with soft material, as list or cloth; specifically, a contrivance by which a strip of india-rubber is adjusted closely to the apertures of a door or window, or its frame or jamb, covering the crevice very tightly: it is generally a wooden molding into which a thin strip of rubber is fitted.

weather-strip (weð'ér-strip), n. t.; pret. and pp. weather-stripped, ppr. weather-stripping. To apply weather-strips to; fit or secure with weather-strips.

weather-symbol (weð'ér-sim'bōl), n. A conventional sign used in meteorological records, or in published meteorological observations or weather-maps, to represent graphically any designated phenomenon. The following symbols have been adopted by the International Meteorological Congress to represent the principal hydrometeors and a few other phenomena. Rain, ☉; snow, ✱; thunderstorm, ⚡; lightning, ⚡; hail, ⚡; mist, ☁; frost, ❄; dew, ⚡; snowdrift, +; high wind, ♀; solar corona, ☉; solar halo, ☉; lunar corona, ☾; lunar halo, ☾; rainbow, ☉; aurora, ✨; haze, dust haze, ☁.

weather-tile (weθ'h'ér-til), n. A tile used as a substitute for a weather-board in frame-buildings. These tiles are overlapped like shingles, and are held in place by nails driven through holes formed in the tiles in molding.

weather-vane (weθ'h'ér-vān), n. A vane to show the direction of the wind; a weather-cock. See cut under vane.

weather-waft (weθ'h'ér-wāft), a. Tossed or carried by the wind. [Rare.]

I cannot but fear that those men never Moored their Anchors well in the firme soile of Heaven that are weather-waft up and down with every eddy-wind of every new doctrine. N. Ward, Simple Cocker, p. 20.

weather-wind (weθ'h'ér-wind), n. [A corruption of withwind for withwind.] Bindweed. Halliwel. [Provincial.] weather-wise (weθ'h'ér-wiz), a. [< ME. wederwis; < weather + wise.] Skilful in prognosticating the changes of the weather.

For thorw werre and wykked werkes and wederes vnre-sorable, Wederwise shipmen and wittli clerkes also Han no billeue to the lifte ne to the lore of filosofres. Piers Plouman (B), xv. 350.

weather-wiser (weθ'h'ér-wi-zér), n. [< weather + wiser, indicator; cf. waywiser.] Something that foretells the changes of the weather.

The flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weather-wiser.
Derham, Physico-Theol., x., note.

weather-work (weθ'h'ér-wérk), n. Defense or provision against the wind, sea, etc. Cook, Voyages, III. i. 3. (Encyc. Dict.)

weather-worn (weθ'h'ér-wörn), a. [< weather + worn.] Worn, injured, or defaced by the action of the weather; weathered.

weather-wreck (weθ'h'ér-rek), n. A wreck by storms. [Rare.]

Well, well, you have built a nest
That will stand all storms; you need not mistrust
A weather-wreck.
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, II. 2.

weave (wēv), v.; pret. wove (formerly also weaved), pp. woven (sometimes wove and formerly also weaved), ppr. weaving. [< ME. weven (pret. waf, wof, pl. weven, woven, pp. woven), < AS. wefan (pret. wæf, pp. wefen) = MD. D. woven = OHG. weban, MHG. G. weben = Icel. vefa = Sw. våfa = Dan. væve, weave (connection with Goth. bi-waiþjan, wrap around, is doubtful), = Gr. ὑφ (orig. ὑφ Fap), in ὑφ, ὑφ, a web, ὑφ, weave; cf. E. web, wetl, woof, onf, abb, etc.] I. trans. 1. To form by interlacing flexible parts, such as threads, yarns, filaments, or strips of different materials. See weaving.

Where the women wove hangings for the grove.
2 Kl. xxiii. 7.

And now his woven girths he breaks asunder.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 266.

To wanton Dalliance negligently laid,
We weave the Chaplet, and we crown the Bowl.
Prior, Solomon, II.

These purple vests were woven by Dardan dames.
Dryden.

2. To form a texture from; interlace or entwine into a fabric.

When she woven the sleeked silk.
Shak., Pericles, IV., Prolog., l. 21.

3. To entwine; unite by intermixture or close connection; insert by or as by weaving.

She waf it wel, and wroote the story above.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2304.

This weaves itself perforce into my business.
Shak., Lear, II. 1. 17.

The government of Episcopacy is now so wear'd into the common law: In Gods name let weave out againe.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., II.

These words, thus woven into song.
Byron, Child Harold, III. 112.

He carries off only such scraps in his memory as it is hardly possible to weave into a connected and consistent whole.
Prescott. (Imp. Dict.)

4. To inclose by weaving something about.

The mind can weave itself warmly in the cocoon of its own thoughts and dwell a hornit anywhere.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 56.

5. To contrive, fabricate; or construct with design or elaborate care; as, to weave a plot.

For answer . . . Aesculus weaveth out a long history of things that happened in the persecution under Decius, and of men which to save life forsook faith Hooker, Eccles. Polity, VI. 6.

My brain, more busy than the labouring spider, weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., III. 1. 340.

Wove paper. See paper.

II. intrans. 1. To practise weaving; work with a loom.

Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance.
Shak., Pericles, IV. 6. 194.

They that pretend to wonders must weave cunningly.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, II. 1.

2. To become woven or interwoven. [Rare.]
The amorous vine which in the elm still weaves.
W. Browne.

3. In the manège, to make a motion of the head, neck, and body from side to side like the shuttle of a weaver: said of a horse. Imp. Dict.

weave (wēv), n. [< weave, v.] The act or a style of weaving. [Trade use.]

A Practical Treatise on the Construction and Application of weaves for all Textile Fabrics. Nature, XXXVIII. 600.

To shake; cause to waver; wave; brandish; toss; waft.

Auntrose [dangerous] is thin enel,
Ful wonderliche it the wewe, wel I wot the sothe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 922.

Shaking a pike of fire in defiance of the enemy, and weauing them annaie, we had them come aboard.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 566.

2. To move; cause to move.

That comli ladi cawres to hire chaumber, & wewed vp a window.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2978.

II. intrans. 1. To wave; waver; float about.

To cold coils ache schal be brent git or come eue;
& the aschis of hire body with the wind wewe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4368.

2. To move; go.

Thou wynlez ouer thys water to wewe.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), l. 319.

He saugh the stroke come and wewyd a-side.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), III. 339.

weavel, n. See weevil.

weaver (wē'vēr), n. [< ME. wevere, wevar, < AS. wefere = MD. D. wener = OHG. weberi, MHG. webare, G. weber = Sw. våfware = Dan. væver, a weaver; as weave + -er. Cf. webber.] 1. One who weaves; one whose occupation is weaving.

Weavers also of wolne and lynnyn.

Weavers were supposed to be generally good singers. Their trade being sedentary, they had an opportunity of practising, and sometimes in parts, while they were at work. Warburton adds that many of the weavers in Queen Elizabeth's days were Flemish Calvinists, who fled from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, and were therefore particularly given to singing psalms. . . . Hence the exclamation of Falstaff, "I would I were a weaver! I could sing psalms, and all manner of songs."

2. In ornith., a weaver-bird. — 3. In entom.: (a) A gyrrinid beetle; a whirligig: so called from its intricate circlings and gyrations on the surface of the water. See whirligig, 4, and cut under Gyrinidae. (b) A spinning-spider; a true araneid which weaves a web. Various groups of such spiders are distinguished by the form of their webs, as line-weavers, orb-weavers, tapestry-weavers, tube-weavers, tunnel-weavers, etc. See spider.

4. In ichth., same as weever. — Mahall weaver. See weaver-bird. — Sociable weaver. See weaver-bird. — Tapestry weaver. See tapestry. — Weavers' bottom. A chronic inflammation of a bursa situated over the tuberosity of the ischium, occurring as a result of sitting long and constantly on a hard seat. — Yellow-crowned weaver. See weaver-bird.

weaver-bird (wē'vēr-bērd), n. One of numerous Old World (chiefly African and Indian) conirostral passerine birds, noted for the dexterity and ingenuity with which they weave the materials of their nests into a textile fabric, and also for the extraordinary size and unusual shape of some of these structures. The name weaver-bird, in its present broad sense, is modern, and appears to have originally specified a single species (see below). In the last and early in the present century the birds of this group which were then known were classed with the finches and grosbeaks, sometimes with the orioles, mainly according to the thickness of the bill, and some of them received still more misleading names. Though there was an Oriolus texator in 1788, the genus Ploceus was not named till 1817, and the family Ploceidae not till 1847. With the recognition of this large and varied group, as well marked from the Fringillidae by the possession of 10 instead of 9 primaries, an English name became a desideratum; and weavers, weaver-birds, or weaver-finches became synonymous with Ploceidae, without implying that all the birds so named build very elaborate nests. (See Ploceus, Ploceidae.) Two remarkable types of nest may be noted. One is the hive-nest of the republic can or sociable weavers, many pairs of which build in common an enormous domed structure. (See Philactes, and cut under hive-nest.) The other, the usual type of nest, is pensile or pendulous, and very closely woven, like that of the American hang-nests, but more elaborate, and with a hole in one side instead of being open at the top, in this respect resembling the nests of various titmice (bush-tits and bottle-tits) and some wrens. These nests are generally along at the ends of long, slender, drooping branches, often over the water of a pool or stream, where they are safest from monkeys and snakes. In some cases the males build additional nests for themselves, in which two eggs are to be laid — a habit, however, not confined to weaver-birds (see cock-nest). One of the largest, most characteristic, and best-known genera of weaver-birds is that African form called Oryz (a preoccupied name) by Lesson in 1831, and Pyromelana by Bonaparte in that year, though often called Euplectes (Swainson, 1837). There are 12 or 15 species, the characteristic coloration of which is black set off with scarlet or orange in large massed areas. P. oryz, the male of which is scarlet and black, is about 5 inches long; it was originally described by Edwards in 1761 as "the grenadier," from some fancied likeness of its plumage to a soldier's uniform. It inhabits South Africa. P. aurea of western Africa is the golden-backed finch and gold-backed grosbeak of the early ornithologists, being one of the yellow and black species. P. capensis, the Cape grosbeak of Latham, is another, from Cape Colony. P. taha, sometimes known as the Mahall weaver, and generally called Ploceus or Euplectes taha, is very small (scarcely 4½ inches long), of rich golden-yellow and velvety-black hues, and its nest is disproportionately large. It belongs to an extensive region of south-eastern Africa. (See cut under taha.) Several other African weavers represent the genus Ploceus, as P. mahall. There is a large series of small birds, all technically weavers (Ploceidae), which fall in the spemestine division of the family, and belong to numerous genera of the Ethiopian, Oriental, and even the Australian region, as various amadavats, waxbills, strawberry-finches, blood-finches, senegals, etc. (See Vidua (a), and cuts under Ploceus, Senegal, Teniopygia, and waxbill.) The birds of an extensive Oriental and Australian genus Munia (with its subdivisions, as Padra) belong here. (See cut under sparrow.) Fifteen species of Uroloncha, characterized by exerted middle tail-feathers, range from Africa to New Guinea; one of them is U. acuticauda. The genus Erythrura is another large one, reaching from India through much of Polynesia. None of the foregoing birds falls in the subfamily Ploceinae as now restricted. Among the latter may be noted the species of the African genus Sitta, 6 in number, of which the best-known is S. capensis of Cape Colony, the olive oriole of Latham, commonly called yellow-crowned weaver and Ploceus teterocephalus. This is 7 inches long, of an olive and golden-yellow and black color; it builds a large bottle-shaped or kidney-formed pensile nest. Foudia is a Madagascar type. The most extensive genus of all is the African Hyphantornis, with over 80 species, or the golden weavers, as H. galbula. These birds represent in Africa, or may be compared with, the hang-nest orioles of America. One of the longest- and best-known is H. cucullatus of western Africa, from Senegambia to the Gaboon; it has often been called H. texator (after Oriolus texator of Gmelin, 1788), and enjoys the distinction of being one of the first, if not the first, to which the name weaver attached, being the weaver oriole of Latham (1782); it is 6 inches long, yellow and black. Malimbus is an African genus of black and crimson, scarlet, vermillion, or yellow coloration, as M. cristatus. The African genus Tector (one of the early names — Temminck, 1828) has 2 marked species, T. albiventer (or allecto), the white-billed, and T. erythrorhynchus (or niger), the red-billed. (See cut under Tector.) Finally the genus Ploceus itself as now restricted is an Oriental type of a few species, commonly called baya-birds, though it used to be indiscriminately applied to any of the foregoing, and became the name-giving genus of the whole group. See cut under Ploceus. (For those Ploceidae known as whidah-birds, see Vidua.)

Weaver-bird (Hyphantornis texator).

weaverens (wē'vēr-es), n. [< weaver + -ens.] A female weaver.

He found two looms alone remaining at work, in the hands of an ancient weaver and weaverens.

J. H. Blunt, Hist. of Dursley, p. 222. (Davies.)

weaver-finch (wē'vēr-finch), n. Any weaver-bird.

The Ploceids, or weaver-finches.

A. R. Wallace, Distribution of Animals, II. 286.

weaver-fish (wē'vēr-fish), n. A fish of the genus Trachinus; a weever. See cut under Trachinus.

weaver-shell (wē'vēr-shel), n. A shuttle-shell. weaver's-shuttle (wē'vēr-zhūt'), n. The shuttle-shell, Radiu volva. See Ovulum, and cut under shuttle-shell.

weavil, n. An old spelling of weevil.

weaving (wē'ving), n. [ME. wevynge, wefyng; verbal n. of weave, v.] 1. The act of one who or that which weaves; specifically, the act or art of producing cloth or other textile fabrics by means of a loom from the combination of threads or filaments. In weaving all kinds of fabrics, whether plain or figured, one system of threads, called the woof or weft, is made to pass alternately under and over another system of threads, called the warp, web, or chain. The essential operations are the successive raising of certain threads of the warp and the depression of others, so as to form a shed for the passage of the weft-yarn, which is then beaten up by means of a lathe or batten. Weaving is performed by the hand in what are called *hand-loom*s, or by steam-power in what are called *power-loom*s, but the general arrangements for both are to a certain extent the same. (See loom.) Weaving, in the most general sense of the term, comprehends not only the manufacture of those textile fabrics which are prepared in the loom, but also that of network, lacework, etc. See cut under shuttle.

2. In the manège, the action of a horse that weaves, or moves the body from side to side.

weazand, n. See weasand.

weazelt, n. See weasel.

weazon (wē'zn), n. See wizen.

web (web), n. [ME. web, webbe, AS. web (webb), a web (= OS. webbi = OFries. web, web = D. web, webbe, a web (= LG. web, webbe = OHG. weppn, wappi, MHG. weppc, webbe, webe, G. dial. webb (cf. G. gewebe), web, woof, = leel. wefr = Sw. väf = Dan. vāv, web), cf. wefan, weave: see weave.] 1. That which is woven; a woven fabric; specifically, a whole piece of cloth in course of being woven, or after it comes from the loom.

Bilholde how Eleyne hath a newe cote;
I wishe thanne it were myne and al the webbe after [i. e., all left after making the coat].
Piers Plowman (B), v. 111.

My dochter she's a thrifty lass;
She span seven year to me;
An' if it war well counted up,
Full ten webs it would be.
Kenney Kaye (Child's Ballads, VIII. 140).

At noon
To-morrow come, and ye shall pay
Each fortieth web of cloth to me,
As the law is, and go your way.
M. Arnold, The Sick King in Bokhara.

2. Same as webbing, 1.—3. The warp in a loom. [Provincial.]—4. Something resembling a web or sheet of cloth; specifically, a large roll of paper such as is used in the web-press for newspapers.

Several men or boys are placed to receive the sheets [of paper] according to the number into which the width of the web is divided.
Ure, Dict., III. 403.

5. Any one of various thin and broad objects, probably so named from some similarity to the thin, broad fabric of the loom. Especially—(a) A sheet or thin plate, as of lead.

There with stately pomp by heaps they wend,
And Christians slain roll up in webs of lead.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, x. 26.

(b) The blade of a sword.

A sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pummel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approved by touch.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, ii. 93.

(c) The blade of a saw. (d) The plate (or its equivalent) in a beam or girder which connects the upper and lower flat or laterally extending plates. (e) The corresponding part of a rail, between the tread and the foot. See cut under rail. (f) The flat part of a wheel, between the nave and the rim, as in some railway-wheels—occupying the space where spokes would be in an ordinary wheel. (g) The solid part of the bit of a key. (h) The part of an anvil below the head, which is of reduced size. (i) The thin, sharp part of the collar of a plow. See cut under plow. (j) A canvas cloth used in a saddle. (k) The basket-work of a gabion. See cut under gabion. (l) In a vehicle, a combination of bands or straps of a stout fabric, serving to keep the hood from opening too far. E. H. Knight. (m) The arm of a crank.

6. In ornith., the blade, standard, vane, or vexillum of a feather: so called from the texture acquired through the weaving or interlocking of the barbs by the barbules with their barbicels and hooklets. That vane which is furthest from the middle line of the bird's body is the outer web; the other, the inner web, is technically distinguished as pogonotheca externum and internum. The two often differ from each other in size, shape, or color, or in all these respects; the difference is most pronounced on the flight-feathers

(as seen in any quill pen) and lateral rudder-feathers. See cut under aftershaft, barb, ocellate, and pencil.

They [barbules] make the vane truly a web: that is, they so connect the barbs together that some little force is required to pull them apart.

Couss, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 84.

7. The plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects for its food; a cobweb; also, a similar substance spun and woven into a sort of fabric by many insects, usually as a covering or protection. See bag-worm, web-worm, and tent-caterpillar.

The Commissioners court's a spiders webbe,
That doth entangle all the lesser flies.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal, of Soul, xviii.

8. Figuratively, anything carefully contrived and elaborately put together or woven; a plot; a scheme.

All this is but a web of the wit; it can work nothing.
Bacon, Praise of Knowledge (ed. 1837).

The Fates at length the blissful Web have spun.
Congress, Birth of the Muse.

O, what a tangled web we weave
When first we practise to deceive!
Scott, Marmion, vi. 17.

It is one web of intricate complications between the Emperors of the East and West, the Republic of Venice, the Kings of Hungary, Dalmatia, and Bosnia.

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 229.

9. In anat., a connective or other tissue; any open structure composed of fibers and membranes running into each other irregularly as if tangled, and serving to support fat or other soft substances. See tissue and histology.

10. In zool., the membrane or fold of skin which connects the digits of any animal; especially, that which connects the toes of a bird or a quadruped, making the animal palmiped, and the foot itself palmate, as occurs in nearly all aquatic birds (hence called web-footed), and in many aquatic mammals, as the beaver, the muskrat, and ornithorhynchus. Webs sometimes occur as a congenital defect of the human fingers or toes. The relatively largest webs are those of the bat's wings. In birds the extent and special character of the webs (technically called palmæ) are taken into some account in classification, and some conditions of the webs receive special names. See web-footed, and cuts under bat, duckbill, fly-frog, Odemia, otary, palmate, semipalmate, and totipalmate.

Some full-breasted swan
That, fluting a wild carol ere her death, Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs.
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

11. In coal-mining, the face or wall of a long-wall stall in course of being holed and broken down for removal. Gresley. [Midland coal-fields, Eng.]—Basal web, a small web between a bird's toes, extending little if any beyond the basal joints of the digits it connects. See cuts under Erreunetes and semipalmate.—Chain-web, a kind of saw; a scroll-saw.—Choroid web, the velum interpositum.—Emarginate web, a full web between a bird's toes, whose free border is notably concave or emarginate. See cut under totipalmate.—Geometrical spider's web. See geometric, and cut under triangle.—Holland web. Same as Holland, n. 1.—Incised web, a very deeply emarginate web of a bird's toes.—India-rubber web, a fabric in which a warp of rubber threads is filled with a weft of silk, linen, or cotton. The warp, rendered inelastic during the weaving, has its elasticity subsequently restored by a process in which the fabric is subjected to heat. Also called elastic web.—Mill-saw web, a thin saw carried in a vertical saw-gate, and used for resawing.—Pin and web. See pin 3.—Spider's web. See spider-web.

Web (web), v. t.; pret. and pp. webbed, ppr. webbing. [ME. webben, AS. webban, weave, web; from the noun.] 1. To cover with or as with a web; envelop.—2. To connect with a web, as the toes of a bird; render palmate.—Webbed fingers, two or more fingers of the human hand which are united by a band of connecting tissue, either occurring congenitally or as an abnormality, or resulting from cicatrization after burns and other wounds; dactylion. See web-fingered, and Dilator's operation (under operation).—Webbed toes, a condition affecting the toes of the human foot, abnormally or accidentally, similar to that of webbed fingers. See web-footed.

webbe, n. [ME. webbe, a weaver, AS. webba, a weaver, cf. wefan, weave: see weave 1, and cf. web.] The ME. noun webbe survives in the proper name Webb. A weaver. See webber.

A webbe, a dyer, and a tapicer.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 362.

The webbes ant the fullaris assembledden hem alle,
Ant makelden hure counsil in hure commune halle.
Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 270).

webbe, n. An old spelling of web.

webbert (web'ēr), n. [ME. webbare, AS. webbere, a weaver, cf. wefan, weave: see web, n. The noun survives in the surname Webber.]

A Middle English form of weaver 1.

webbing (web'ing), n. [ME. webbynge; verbal n. of web, v.] 1. A woven material, especially one woven without pile, plainly and strongly. The term is applied to material or pieces of material which are intended for strength, to bear a weight, to be drawn tight, or the like, as a belt or surcingle, and also for that which serves to protect and cover the edge of a piece of more delicate fabric: thus, Eastern rugs are often made with several inches of webbing projecting beyond the part that is covered with pile.

2. In printing, the broad tapes used to conduct webs or sheets of paper in a printing-machine, or the broad straps or girths attached to the rounce of the hand-press.—3. In zool., the webs of the digits collectively: as, the webbing is extensive or complete; the webbed state of the digits, or the formation of their webs; palmation. See web, n., 10.—Elastic webbing. See elastic.

webby (web'i), a. [cf. web + -y.] Relating to a web, or consisting of a web, in any sense; web-like; membranous.

Bats on their webby wings in darkness move,
And feebly shriek their melancholy love.
Crabbe, Works, I. 50.

weber (vā'bér), n. [After Wilhelm Weber (1804–1891), a German physicist.] A name proposed by Latimer Clarke for the unit of electrical quantity which has since been named coulomb; it was also for some time used for the practical unit of electrical current which is now called ampere.

Weberian (we-bé'ri-an), a. [cf. Weber (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or named after a person named Weber (in the following phrases E. H. Weber, 1795–1833, a German anatomist and physiologist).—Weberian apparatus, the whole of the parts or organs by means of which the air-bladder of some fishes is connected with the ear, including the Weberian ossicles and their connections.

An air-bladder connected with the auditory organ by intervention of a Weberian apparatus, formed of parts of the anterior vertebrae, modified after precisely the same plan as in the other alitoides.

Amer. Nat., May, 1889, p. 427.

Weberian ossicles. See ossicle.

weber-meter (vā'bér-mé'tér), n. Same as ampere-meter or as coulomb-meter (see weber).

Weber's chronometer. A kind of metronome invented by Gottfried Weber, consisting of a weight and a graduated and adjustable cord. See metronome.

Weber's corpuscle. The depression in the veru montanum situated between the openings of the ejaculatory ducts.

Weber's experiment. The experiment of closing one ear to find that a vibrating tuning-fork placed with the end resting against the vertex will be heard more distinctly in that ear.

Weber's glands. The mucous glands of the tongue.

Weber's law. See law 1.

Weber's paradox. The fact that a muscle, when so stretched that it cannot contract, may elongate.

web-eye (web'i), n. In pathol., same as pterygium, 2.

web-eyed (web'id), a. Exhibiting or affected with the disease called web-eye.

web-fingered (web'fing'gér'd), a. Having the fingers of the hand, or any digits of the fore limb, connected by means of more or less extensive webs formed of a fold of skin: as, the bat is a completely web-fingered animal. The fingers of the human hand are naturally webbed a little at the base, and sometimes connected for their whole length, constituting a congenital deformity. Compare webbed fingers (under web, v. t.), and see cuts under bat, fly-frog, and fly-frog.

He was, it is said, web-footed naturally, and partially web-fingered.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 137.

web-foot (web'fút), n. A foot whose toes, or some of them, are webbed; also, the condition of being web-footed. As applied to persons, it implies an abnormal condition, corresponding to the web-fingered.—Gillie web-foot. See gillie.

web-footed (web'fút'ed), a. Having web-feet; being web-footed, whether as an abnormality of persons, or as the natural formation of the feet of many aquatic animals. Many mammals are web-footed, as the seal, the otter, the muskrat, the beaver, and the duck mole. Nearly all swimming and many wading birds are web-footed, to a varying extent in different cases. The salient batrachians are mostly web-footed, especially frogs, as to their hind feet. See web, n., 10, web, v. t., webbing, 3, pinniped, palmiped, palmate, semipalmate, totipalmate, with various cuts, and those under fly-frog, duckbill, and otary.

web-footedness (web'fút'ed-nēs), n. Web-foot; the state of being web-footed.

web-machine (web'mā-shēn'), n. Same as web-press.

web-press (web'pres), n. A printing-machine which is automatically supplied with its paper from a great web or roll: usually a rotary machine, but the name is given to newspaper printing-machines of different constructions, like those of Hoe, Marinoni, Walter, and others. See cut under printing-machine.

web-saw (web'sā), n. A frame-saw.

The web-saw, the glue-pot, the plane, and the hammer are the principal tools used. The Century, XXXVII. 418.

webster (web'stēr), n. [= Se. wabster; < ME. webstere, webstar, < AS. webbestre, a female weaver, < webban, weave; see web and -ster. As with other ME. forms in -ster (strictly fem. in themselves), the word was also often regarded as masc. (cf. baxter and brewster), used as masc. in ME.). The name survives in the surname Webster.] A weaver. Wyclif, Job vii. 6.

One witness says "a very good webster can scarcely earne lower pence a day with weaving."

Record Soc. Lancashire and Cheshire, XI. 53.

websterite (web'stēr-īt), n. [So named in honor of Thomas Webster (1772-1844), a Scottish geologist.] A mineral; hydrous tribasic sulphate of aluminium, found in Sussex, England, and at Halle in Prussia, in reniform masses and botryoidal concretions of a white or yellowish-white color.

Webster's condenser. An apparatus consisting of two lenses, used in microscopy for intensifying the light thrown on the object.

web-toed (web'tod), a. Web-footed.

web-wheel (web'hwēl), n. A wheel in which the hub and rim are connected by a web or plate, which may be either intact or perforated. It is a common form for railway car-wheels, and is also used for the wheels of watches and clocks, which are cast or stamped with webs, and then crossed out—that is, the web is perforated and filed into the form of spokes. E. H. Knight.

web-winged (web'wingd), a. Winged by large webs stretched between elongated digits of the fore limbs, as bats; chiropterous. See cuts under bat and Furia.

web-worm (web'wōrm), n. Any one of several lepidopterous larvæ which feed more or less gregariously, and spin large webs into which they retire at night, or within which they feed during the day until the contained foliage is entirely devoured, when the web is enlarged. The tent-caterpillars, Chimæropa americana and C. sylvestris, are web-worms. (See cut under tent-caterpillar.) The fall web-worm is the larva of the bombycid Hypophora cuneata. The garden web-worm is the larva of Eurycreon rufatus, a pyralid moth of the family Notidae. This species is not gregarious, but the larvæ form individual webs near the roots of corn, cotton, cabbage, melon, potato, and other cultivated crops in the western United States.—Grape web-worm. Same as vine inch-worm (which see, under vine).—Turf web-worm. Same as sod-worm.

wecht (wecht), n. [Also spelled weight, weght; perhaps connected with ME. weggen, < AS. weegan, move, a secondary verb, < wegan, carry; see weigh, and cf. weight.] An instrument in the form of a sieve, but without holes, used for lifting grain. Burns. [Scotch.]

wed (wed), n. [= Se. wad; < ME. wed, wedde, < AS. wēd, wēd, a pledge, = OFries. wēd = MD. wedde = OHG. wetti, wēti, MHG. wette, wete, wet, G. wette = Icel. veth, a pledge, = Sw. vad, a bet, appeal, = Goth. wadi, a pledge, = L. vas (wad-), a pledge; cf. Gr. ἄλλω, contr. ἀλλοῦ (*orig. āFelloῦ), a prize, the prize of a contest (> ult. E. athlete, etc.); cf. Skt. vadhū, a bride, woman. Hence wed, v. wadset, etc. From the same source, L. or Teut., are ult. E. wadimony, gage, engage, wage, wager, etc.] A plodge; pawn; security.

G. wecke, weck, a wedge-shaped loaf, = Icel. veggr = Sw. rigg = Dan. vægge, a wedge; prob. lit.
'a mover' (from the use and effect in splitting),
ult. from the verb represented by weigh¹. Cf.
Lith. wapis, a bent wooden peg for hanging things on, a spigot for a cask, also a wedge.] 1. A simple machine consisting of a very acute-angled triangular prism of hard material, which is driven in between objects to be separated, or into anything which is to be split. The wedge is merely a special application of an inclined plane, and is nowise entitled to a distinct place in the list of mechanical powers.

Wedge.

Yf thai nyl bere, a wedge oute of a bronde
Ywrought dryve in the roote, or sumdel froo
Let diche and fild with ashen let it stonde.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 53.

Thorw wich pyu ther goth a litel wedge which that is cleped the hors. Chaucer, Astrolabe.

For 'tis with Pleasure as it is with Wedges; one drives out another.

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 157.

2. A mass resembling a wedge in form; anything in the form of a wedge.

They gather it [gold] with great labour and melte it and caste it, fyrste into masses or wedges, and afterwarde into brode plates.

R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster (First Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 29).

Open the malls, yet guard the treasure sure;
Lay out our golden wedges to the view.

Marlowe, Tamburlaine, I., i. 12.

A wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight. Josh. vii. 21.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.

Milton, P. R., iii. 309.

3. In her., a bearing representing a triangle with one very acute angle—that is, like a pile, but free in the escutcheon instead of being attached to one of its edges.—4. In Cambridge University, the name given to the man whose name stands lowest on the list of the classical trips: said to be a designation suggested by the name (Wedgewood) of the man who occupied this place on the first list (1824). Compare wooden spoon, under spoon 1.

Five were Wranglers, four of these Double men, and the fifth a favorite for the Wedge. The last man is called the Wedge, corresponding to the Spoon in Mathematics.

C. A. Bristed, English University, p. 312.

Footall wedge. Same as fox-wedge.—The thin or small end of the wedge, figuratively, an initiatory move of small apparent importance, but calculated to produce or lead to an ultimate important effect.—Wedge of least resistance, the form in which loose earth and other substances yield to pressure.—Wooden wedge. Same as wedge 1, 4.

wedge¹ (wej), v.; pret. and pp. wedged, ppr.
wedging. [late ME. wedgen; from the noun.]

1. trans. 1. To cleave with a wedge or with wedges; rive.

My heart,

As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain.

Shak., T. and C., i. 1. 85.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven; crowd or compress closely; jam.

Among the crowd 't the Abbey; where a finger

Could not be wedged in more.

Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 63.

Wedged in the rocky shoals, and sticking fast.

Dryden, Æneid, v. 285.

The age had not so much refinement that any sense of impropriety restrained the wearers of petticoat and far-thingale from stepping forth into the public ways, and wedging their not unsubstantial persons . . . into the throng nearest to the scaffold at an execution.

Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, II.

3. To fasten with a wedge or with wedges; fix in the manner of a wedge: as, to wedge on a scythe; to wedge in a rail or a piece of timber.—
4. In ceram., to cut, divide, and work together (a mass of wet clay) to drive out bubbles and render it plastic, just before placing it on the wheel.—5. To make into the shape of a wedge; render cuneiform.—6. To force apart or split off with or as with a wedge.

Yawning fissures which will surely widen until they wedge off the projecting masses, and strip huge slices from the face of the cliff.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, II.

II. intrans. To force one's way like a wedge.

Haunting

The Globes and Mermals, wedging in with lords

Still at the table. B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, III. 1.

wedge² (wej), n. [A dial. var. of wadge, wage.]
A pledge; a gage. Halliwel.

Wedgebill (Schistes personatus).

wedgebill (wej'bil), n. A humming-bird of the genus Schistes, having the bill of peculiar shape, rather thick for a hummer, and suddenly sharp-pointed. There are 2 species, both Ecuadorian, S. geoffroyi and S. personatus, 3½ inches long.
See cut in preceding column.

wedge-bone (wej'bôn), n. An ossicle often found on the under surface of the spinal column at the junction of any pair of vertebrae: more fully called subvertebral wedge-bone.

Such a separate ossification, or sub-vertebral wedge-bone, is commonly developed beneath and between the odon-toid bone and the body of the second vertebra [in Lacer-tia]. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 187.

wedge-cutter (wej'kut'er), n. 1. An instrument used in dentistry to cut off the projecting part of a wedge that has been driven between two teeth.—2. In wood-working, a machine for relishing and cutting the wedges of a door-rail. See relish 2. E. H. Knight.

wedged (wej'd), a. [wedge + -ed 2.] In zool., wedge-shaped; cuneiform or cuneate: as, a wedged bone; the wedged tail of a bird.

wedge-micrometer (wej'mi-krom'e-tér), n. See micrometer.

wedge-photometer (wej'fô-tom'e-tér), n. An instrument for measuring the brightness of stars. It consists of a long wedge of neutral-tinted dark glass arranged to slide before the eyepiece of a telescope, and provided with a graduated scale. The scale-reading, which corresponds to the thickness of the wedge at the point where the image of the star becomes invisible, determines the star's brightness.

wedge-press (wej'pres), n. A press for extracting oil from seeds, as hemp-seed, sunflower-seed, etc., by crushing. It has perforated iron cheek-plates, between which the seeds are placed in hair bags, with blocks and wedges between the bags and the plates.
A tightening-wedge is then driven in by a maul, and the juice escapes through the perforations in the plates, and is collected in a cistern below.

wedge-shaped (wej'shapt), a. Having the shape of a wedge; wedged; cuneiform; cune-ate: as, a wedge-shaped leaf; the wedge-shaped tail of a bird: usually noting surfaces, without regard to solidity.—Wedge-shaped isobar, an isobar bounding a projecting area of high pressure moving along between two cyclones.

wedge-shell (wej'shel), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Donacidae.

wedge-tailed (wej'täld), a. Having the tail wedged or cuneate: noting birds whose tailfeathers are regularly graduated in length to such an extent that the tail when moderately spread appears to be beveled off obliquely at the end from the middle to the outermost feather on each side. It is a very common formation. See cuts under Sphenocercus, Sphenura, Trichoglossus, and Uroaetus.—Wedge-tailed eagle, Uroaetus aulax, of Australia. See cut under Uroaetus.— Wedge-tailed pigeon or dove. See Sphenocercus (with cut).

wedge-valve (wej'valv), n. A wedge-shaped valve driven into its seat by a screw: used for closing water-mains, etc.

wedge-wise (wej'wiz), adv. In the manner of a wedge.

wedging (wej'ing), n. 1. A method of joining timbers, in which the tenon is made just long enough to pass through the mortised piece, and a small wedge is driven into a saw-cut in the end of the tenon, with the effect of expanding it, and thus preventing its withdrawal.—2. In knocking clay for fine modeling, the process of cutting the clay to pieces, as by means of a strained wire, and then throwing the severed pieces forcibly upon the mass, the object being to expel the air.—Foottail wedging. See foottail.

wedging-crib (wej'ing-krib), n. In mining, in shaft-sinking in very watery ground, a curb or crib on which the tubbing is placed. It generally consists of pieces of oak carefully shaped and joined together. Between the exterior of this curb and the rock there is left a space of a few inches in width, which is made water-tight by the most careful wedging and the use of moss. The object of the whole arrangement of the wedging-crib and the tubbing which rests upon it is permanently to hold back the water which would otherwise find its way into the shaft and have to be raised to the surface by pumping. In some mining districts the wedg-ing-crib is made of cast-iron.

Wedwood scale. A scale used by the inventor in measuring high temperatures by his pyrometer: as, 10° Wedwood. The zero corresponds to 1077° F.

Wedwood ware. See ware 2.

wedgy (wej'i), a. [wedge 1 + -y 1.] Formed or adapted to use as a wedge; fitted for prying into or among.

Pushed his wedgy snout far within the straw subja-cent. Lander. (Imp. Dict.)

wedhood (wed'hüd), n. [ME. wedhod; < wed
+ -hood.] The state of marriage.

Save in here wedhod

That ys feyre to-fere God.

MS. Cott. Claud. A. II. f. 129. (Halliwell.)

wedlock (wed'lok), n. [ME. wedlac, wedlak, wedloke, wedlaik, wedlock, matrimony, marriage, < AS. wedluc, pledge, < wed, a pledge, + luc, a gift, etc.: see wed and lake 3, loke 4.] The compound wedlac is supposed to mean 'a gift given as a pledge,' hence a gift given to a bride, but the second element is perhaps to be taken in the sense of 'condition, state,' being ult. nearly identical with the suffix in knowledge, etc.] 1. Marriage; matrimony; the married state; the vows and sacrament of marriage.
Sometimes used attributively.

Which that men clepeth spousall or wedlock.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 59.

You would sooner commit your grave head to this knot than to the wedlock noose. B. Jonson, Epicæne, II. 1.

By holy crosses . . . she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 32.

2†. A wife.

Which of these is thy wedlock. Menelaus? thy Helen, thy Lucroe? B. Jonson, Poetaster, iv. 1.

To break wedlock, to commit adultery. Ezek. xvi. 38.

Howe be it, she kept but euyl the sacrament of matrimony, but brake her wedlock.

Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. xxi.

= Syn. 1. Matrimony, Wedding, etc. See marriage.

wedlock (wed'lok), v. t. [< wedlock, n.] To unite in marriage; marry.

Man thus wedlocked. Milton, Divorce, II. 15.

Wednesday (wenz'dä), n. [ME. Wednesday, Wodnesdei, Wodnesdai, < AS. Wōdnes dæg = D.
Woensdag = Icel. Öðinsdagr = Sw. Dan. Ondag (for Odensdag*); lit. 'Woden's day': AS.
Wōdnes, gen. of Wōden = OS. Wōdan, Wōden =
OHG. Wuotan, Wōtan = Icel. Öðinn (> E. Odin), Woden; prob. lit. 'the furious,' i. e., the mighty warrior, < AS. wōd, etc., furious, raging, mad:
see wood 2.] The fourth day of the week; the day next after Tuesday. Abbreviated W., Wed.
See week 1.—Pulver Wednesday. Same as Ash Wednesday.

wedset, v. t. [ME. wedsetten; < wed + set 1.
Cf. wadset.] To pledge: same as wadset.

wee¹ (wē), n. and a. [ME. we, in the phrase a little we, a little bit, a short way or space, appar. for a little way, the form we being appar.
a Scand. form (Icel. vegr, a way, = Sw. väg = Dan. vei) of way: see way 1. Little and wee were and are so constantly associated that they have become synonymous, and wee has changed to an adjective. Cf. way-bit, equiv. to wee bit. E. wee cannot be connected with OHG.
wenac, G. wenig, little.] I. n. A bit. Specifically
- (a) A short distance.

Behynd hir a littil wee

It [a stone] fell.

Barbour, Bruce (E. E. T. S.), xvii. 677.

(b) A short space of time.

O hold your hand, you minister,

Hold it a little wee.

Sweet William (Child's Ballads, IV. 268).

II. a. Small; little; tiny. [Colloq.]

He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard.
Shak., M. W. of W., I. 4. 22.

wee², n. An obsolete form of wee.

wee³, pron. An old spelling of we.

weebit (wē'bit), n. Same as way-bit.

weechelm, n. An obsolete form of witch-elm.

weed¹ (wēd), n. [ME. weed, wed, weod, wiod, a weed, < AS. wōd, wiod = OS. MD. wiod, D.
wiede, a weed, = LG. woden, woen, pl., the green stalks and leaves of turnips, etc.] 1. Any one of those herbaceous plants which are useless and without special beauty, or especially which are positively troublesome. The application of this general term is somewhat relative. Handsome but pernicious plants, as the oxeye daisy, cone-flower, and the purple cow-wheat of Europe (Melampyrum arvense), are weeds to the agriculturist, flowers to the esthetic. So also plants that are cultivated for use or beauty, as grasses, hemp, carrot, parsnip, morning-glory, become weeds when they spring up where they are not wanted. The exotics of cool countries are sometimes weeds in the tropics.

On fat londe and ful of donge foulest wedes groweth.
Piers Plowman (G), xlii. 224.

An ill weed grows apace. Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 3.

2. A sorry, worthless animal unfit for the breeding of stock; especially, a leggy, loose-bodied horse; a race-horse having the appearance but wanting the other qualities of a thoroughbred. [Slang.]

He bore the same relation to a man of fashion that a weed does to a "winner of the Derby."

Lever, Davenport Dunn, II.

3. A cigar; with the definite article, tobacco.
[Colloq.]

Sir Rufus puffed his own weed in solitude, strolling up and down the terrace.

H. James, Jr., Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 88.

Angola weed, an archil-plant, Ramulina furfuracea, growing in Angola, a district on the western coast of Africa. — Asthma-weed, Lobelia inflata, Indian tobacco. — Cancer-weed, a name given to a wild sage, Salvia lyrata, to the rattlesnake-plantain, Goodyera pubescens, and to a species of rattlesnake-root, Prenanthes alba. (U. S.) — Consumptive's-weed. See consumptive. — Cross-weed, a plant of the cruciferous genus Diplotaxis. — Emetic, French, guinea-ben weed. See the qualifying words. — Jamestown weed. See Jimson-weed and stramonium. — Joy-weed, a plant of the genus Alternanthera. — Phthisis-weed, Ludwigia palustris, water-purslane. — Salt-rhumb-weed. See salt-rhumb. — Soldier's weed, Piper angustifolium, matico. — Turpentine-weed, the rosin-weed, Silphium laciniatum. — Yaw-weed. See Morinda. (See basil-weed, bindweed, biakop's-weed, breastweed, butterweed, carpet-weed, dyer's-weed, Jocque-weed, knay-weed, knottweed, lake-weed, licorice-weed, loco-weed, mat-weed, Mauritius-weed, mermaid-weed, milkweed, morass-weed, muquweed, neckweed, oreweed, trumpetweed, tumbleweed, winterweed, yellow-weed.)

weed¹ (wēd), v. [ME. weeden, weoden, < AS. weodian, weed, = D. wieden = LG. weden, wen = G. dial. wieten, weed: see *weed*¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To free from weeds or noxious plants.

There were also a few species of antique and hereditary flowers, in no very flourishing condition, but scrupulously weeded.

Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vi.

2. To take away, as noxious plants; remove what is injurious, offensive, or unseemly; extirpate.

Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shak., Cor., iv. 5. 108.

We'll join to weed them out. B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 1.

3. To free from anything hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the Kingdom of such as were devoted to Elial-ana. Howell, Vocall Forrest, p. 47.

II. intrans. To root up and remove weeds, or anything resembling weeds.

Thei coruen here copes and courtieples hem made,
And werten as workmen to weeden and mowen;
Al for drede of here deth, suche dynes gaf Hunger.

Piers Plowman (C), ix. 186.

There are also in the plains and rich low grounds of the freshes, abundance of hops, which yield their product without any labor of the husbandman, in weeding, hilling, or polling.

Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 17.

weed¹, a. A reduced form of weeded, past participle of *weed*¹.

weed² (wēd), n. [ME. wede, wæde, < AS. wæde, neut., wæd, f., a garment, = OS. wædi = OFries. wæde, wad = MD. wade, waede, a garment, = OHG. MHG. wāt, clothing, accoutrements, armor, G. obs. wāt (cf. G. leinwand, linen cloth, canvas, with interloping n, by false analogy with gewand, garment, < OHG. MHG. linwāt = AS. linwæd) = Ice. vāth, a piece of stuff or cloth, also a garment (see *wad*¹, wadmat); cf. Goth. ga-widan (pret. gawath), bind together; Zend. wadh, clothe.] A garment of any sort, especially an outer garment; hence, garments in general, especially the whole costume worn at any one time; now commonly in the plural, and chiefly in the phrase widows' weeds. See *widow*¹.

He spendeth, jousteth, maketh festeynynges;
He geveth frely ofte and chaumeth wede.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1719.

The gret dispite which in hert he had Off Froumont, that in monkes wede was clad.
Rom. of Parleyay (E. E. T. S.), i. 8410.

O sir, know that vnder simple weede
The gods lene maake.
Greene, Orlando Furioso (ed. Grosart), i. 1130.

weed³ (wēd), n. [Sc. also weid; origin obscure.]

1. A general name for any sudden illness from cold or relapse, usually accompanied by febrile symptoms, taken by women after confinement or during nursing, especially milk-fever or inflammation of the breast. [Scotch.] — 2. Lymphangitis in the horse, characterized by fever and temporary swelling of the limbs. It appears usually after a period of inactivity.

weed⁴ (wēd), n. [Perhaps a dial. var. of *weigh*¹.] A heavy weight. Halkwell. [Prov. Eng.] weeded (wēded), a. [*< weed*¹ + -ed.] Overgrown with weeds. [Rare.]

Weeded and worn the ancient thatch
Upon the lonely moated grange.
Tennyson, Mariana.

weeder (wēder), n. [ME. weadere, a weeding-hook; < *weed*¹ + -er.] 1. One who weeds, or frees from anything noxious.

A weeder-out of his proud adversaries.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 8. 123.

These weeders thereby procuring some wages of the husbandmen to their owners. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 487.

2. In agri., any form of hand- or horse-tool for uprooting or destroying weeds. The name is given especially to one of a class of small hand-tools having a series of bent teeth, a sharp steel bow set transversely, or a modified hoe-blade, etc., the object of all being to cut off the weeds below the surface, or to drag them up by the roots.

weeder-clips (wēder-klips), n. pl. Weeding-shears. Burns. [Scotch.] weedery (wēder-i), n. [*< weed*¹ + -ery.] 1. Weeds collectively. [Rare.]

The weedery which through
The interstices of those neglected courts
Unchecked had flourished long, and seeded there,
Was trampled then and bruised beneath the feet.
Southey.

2. A place full of weeds. Imp. Dict. [Rare.] weed-grown (wēd'grōn), a. Overgrown with weeds.

weed-hook (wēd'hūk), n. [= Sc. weedhook; < ME. weodhook, wiedzoc, wezhoc, < AS. weodhōc, < wēdō, weed, + hōc, hook.] 1. A hook used for cutting away or extirpating weeds. Tusser, Husbandry. — 2. An attachment to a plow for bending the weeds over in front of the share so that they may be covered by the inverted sod.

weediness (wē'di-nes), n. A weedy character or state: as, a garden remarkable for its weediness.

weeding (wē'ding), n. [< ME. weedyng; verbal n. of *weed*¹, v.] The act or process of removing weeds from ground.

weeding-fork (wē'ding-fōrk), n. A strong three-pronged fork with flat tines, used for clearing ground of weeds.

weeding-hook (wē'ding-hūk), n. [< ME. weedyng-hooke; < weeding + hook.] Same as weed-hook, 1.

The last purgatory-fire which God uses, to burn the thistles. . . . when the gentle influence of a sun-beam will not whiten them, nor the weeding-hook of a short affliction cut them out.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1885), I. 829.

weeding-iron (wē'ding-i'ern), n. Same as weeding-fork.

weeding-pincers (wē'ding-pin'sērz), n. sing. and pl. Same as weeding-forceps.

weeding-rim (wē'ding-rim), n. [Spelled erroneously weeding-rhim; < weeding + E. dial. rim, remove, var. of *ream*²: see *ream*².] An implement somewhat like the frame of a wheelbarrow, used for tearing up weeds on summer fallows, etc. [Local, Eng.] weeding-shears (wē'ding-shērz), n. sing. and pl. Shears used for cutting weeds.

weeding-tongs (wē'ding-tōngz), n. sing. and pl. Same as weeding-forceps.

weeding-tool (wē'ding-tōl), n. An implement for pulling up, digging up, or cutting weeds.

weedless (wēd'los), a. [*< weed*¹ + -less.] Free from weeds or noxious matter.

Weedless paradises. Donne, Anatomy of the World, i.

weedy¹ (wē'di), a. [*< weed*¹ + -y.] 1. Having the character of a weed; weed-like.

Some of them are clever in a way; rooted fools by nature, who bear a weedy little blossom of wit, and suppose themselves to flower all over, like rhododendrons in the season.

D. C. Murray, Weaker Vessel, xiv.

2. Consisting of weeds.

Her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

Nettles, kix, and all the weedy nation.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph over Death.

3. Abounding with weeds. Irring.

When the grain is weedy, we must reap high.
S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 8.

4. Not of good blood; not of good strength or mettle; scraggy; hence, worthless, as for breeding or racing purposes: as, a weedy horse. [Slang.]

Along the middle of the street the main business was horse-dealing, and a gypsy holder would trot out a succession of the weedy old scraws that ever kept out of the kennels.

Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 625.

weedy² (wē'di), a. [*< weed*² + -y.] Clad in weeds, or widows' mourning. [Rare.]

She was as weedy as in the early days of her mourning.

weef (wēf), n. [Prob. a dial. var. of woof.] A flexible tough sapling, or a split sapling, adapted for interweaving with others, as in the manufacture of crates. [Prov. Eng.] week¹ (wēk), n. [Early mod. E. also weke; < ME. weke, wike, wuke, wake, wouke (pl. wiken, woken, wikes, wukes, wokes), a week, period of seven days, < AS. wice, wicu, wuce, wucu = OS. wika = OFries. wike = MD. weke, D. week = MLG. weke, LG. weke, wek, week = OHG. wehha, also wolha (> Finnish wiika), MHG. woche, wuche, G. woche, week, = Ice. vika = Sw. vecka = Dan. uge (for uge*), a week, = Goth. wikkō, found in the phrase wikkōn kunjis seints, tr. Gr. τῇ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν αἰνῶν, L. in ordine vicis sue, 'in the order of his course,' Luke i. 8, but prob. to be taken, in the Goth., as 'in the week or period of his course,' wikkōn appearing to mean 'succession,' 'change,' hence 'recurrent period,' and to be allied to Ice. vika, turn, return, etc.: see weak. The collocation of the Goth. wikkōn and the L. vicis in this passage, and the resemblance of form, have given rise to the notion that the Teut. word is borrowed from the L.; but the L. word equiv. to wikkōn is ordine, and there is no evidence that L. vix*, vicis was ever used in the sense 'week.'] 1. A period of seven days, of which the days are numbered or named in like succession in every period — in English, Sunday (or first day, etc.), Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday (or seventh day); hence, a period of seven days. The week is not dependent upon any other period, as a subdivision of that period, but cuts across the division-lines of month and year alike with its never-ending repetition. In general Jewish and Christian belief, it is founded on the creation of the world in six days (according to the account in Genesis), with a succeeding seventh day of rest, specially commemorated by the Jewish rest-day, or Sabbath, our Saturday. It has also been conjectured to represent a fourth of the lunar month of about 28 days; but no people is known as having made and maintained such a subdivision of the month. As a period and division of time, its use is limited to Jews and Christians (including also in some measure the Mohammedans, by derivation from these); but the week-day names and their succession are found more widely, and are of a wholly different origin; they rest upon an astrological principle, which assigns each day in succession to one of the planets as regent; and they further involve a division of the day into 24 hours. If the planets are arranged in the order of their distance from us as held by the ancients — namely, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon, — then, if the first hour of a day is allotted to Saturn, and each following hour to the next planet, the 25th hour, or the first of the next day, will fall to the Sun, the 49th, or the first of the following day, to the Moon, and so to Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, in succession; and, each planet being reckoned as regent of the whole day of whose first hour it is regent, the days are Sun's day, Moon's day, Mars' day, and so on to Saturn's day, where the same succession is taken up anew. These names were unknown to, or at least never used by, the Jews, nor do they appear in classical Greek, nor do the Mohammedans employ them; but they passed from Roman use to European, and not only in their Latin form, but also as translated into Germanic languages, the names of Germanic divinities being, by a rude identification, substituted in them for those of the Roman, as Mars, etc., without any regard to the planets (see the names Tuesday, etc.); and they are found also in India, which doubtless received them, with the rest of its astronomy and astrology, from Greece and Rome. The Indian days are coincident with our days of the same name — that is, it is Sun's day there when it is our Sunday, and so on. But there is no other than an astrological significance belonging to the names there; a week as a division of time is wholly unknown to both ancient and modern India. In law, week is sometimes construed to mean any period of seven full days, and sometimes to mean such a period beginning with the beginning of a Sunday. Thus, a requirement of 'a week's notice' may be satisfied by the lapse of any seven consecutive days, but a publication of a notice 'once in each week for three weeks before the sale' is held to contemplate three weeks reckoned as from Sunday to Sunday, not merely 21 days before the sale. Abbreviated w., wk.

By twyne the Cytee of Darke and the Cytee of Raphane ys a Eyvere, that men clepen Sabatorye. For on the Saturday hyt renneth faste; and alle the Wooke elles hyt stondeth styll, and renneth nouzt or lytle.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 125.

I shal namore come here this wyke.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 480.

Nor can I go much to country-houses for the same reason. Say what they will, ladies do not like you to smoke in their bed-rooms; their silly little noses scent out the odour upon the chintz, weeks after you have left them.

Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions.

2. The six working-days of the week; the week minus Sunday: as, to be paid so much a week.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week.

Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 76.

A prophetic week, in Scrip., a week of years, or seven years. — A war of weeks. See war. — A week of Sundays, seven Sundays; hence, seven weeks, and, more loosely, a long time. See Pentecost, 1.—This (that) day week. See day.
This day-week you will be alone.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxvi.

Week about. See about.—Week's day, that day of last week or of next week which corresponds to the present day.

I mene if God please to be at Salisbury the weekendes at night before Easterdale; where for divers respectes I would gladly speake with you.
Darrell Papers (1582) (H. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age).

week²⁴, n. An obsolete form of wick.¹

week³ (wēk), n. [Sc. also weik, wick; a var. of wike.¹] A corner; an angle: as, the weeks of the mouth or the eye.

The men of the world say we will sell the truth; we will let them ken that we will hing by the wicks of the mouth for the least point of truth.
M. Bruce, Soul-Confirmation, p. 18. (Jamieson.)

week-day (wēk'dā), n. [E. dial. weedyday; < ME. wekeday*, < AS. wicedæg, wucdæg = Icel. vikudagr; as *week*¹ + day.¹] Any day of the week except Sunday: often used adjectively.

She loues Preaching better then Praying, and of Preachers Lecturers, and thinks the Weekes-dayes Exercise farre more edifying then the Sundales.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Shee precise Hypocrite.
 One solid dish his week-day meal affords,
 One added pudding solemnised the Lord's.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 345.

For dinner—which on a week-day is hardly ever eaten at the costermonger's abode—they buy "block ornaments," as they call the small, dark-coloured pieces of meat exposed on the cheap butchers' blocks or counters.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 62.

weekly (wēk'li), a. and n. [*< week*¹ + -ly.¹] I. a. 1. weep¹ (wēp), n. [< ME. wepe, wep, a later form, after the verb, of wop, < AS. wōp, clamor, cry: see weep.¹, v.] 1. Weeping; a fit of weeping.

She began to broste a wepe anon.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 408.

Wid rewell lote, and sorwe, and wep.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), I. 232a.

2. Exudation; sweat, as of a gum-tree; a leak, as in the joint of a pipe. [Obsolete, colloq., or trade use.]

weep²⁴, n. [Imitative.] Same as pewweep for powit. Also wype, wipe.

weepable (wē'pā-bl), a. [Early mod. E. wepeable; < *weep*¹ + -able.] Exciting or moving to tears; lamentable; grievous. Bp. Peacock.

weeper (wē'pēr), n. [*< weep*¹ + -er.¹] 1. One who weeps; one who sheds tears; specifically, a hired mourner at a funeral.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers; tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, II. 6.

Laughing is easy, but the wonder lies
 What store of brine supplied the weeper's eyes.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 46.

2. Something worn conventionally as a badge of mourning. (a) A strip of white linen or muslin worn on the end of the sleeve like a cuff. The term is also used for the band of crape worn as a mark of mourning.

Our . . . mourners clap bits of muslin on their sleeves, and these are called weepers.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xcvi.

There was not a widow in all the country who went to such an expense for black bombazine. She had her beautiful hair confined in crimped caps, and her weepers came over her elbows.
Thackeray, Bluebeard's Ghost.

(b) A long lathand, like a scarf, of crape or other black stuff, worn by men at a funeral.

It is a funeral street, Old Parr Street, certainly; the carriages which drive there ought to have feathers on the roof, and the butlers who open the doors should wear weepers.
Thackeray, Philip, II.

(c) The long black crape veil worn by a widow in her weeds.

Most thankful I shall be to see you with a couple o' pounds' worth less of crape. . . . If anybody was to marry me flatterer himself I should wear these lifeless weepers two years for him, he'd be deceived by his own vanity, that's all.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxx.

3. Anything resembling a weeper in senses 1 and 2 in shape or use.

The firs were hung with weepers of black-green moss.
W. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 169.

The eyes with which it (the aqueduct tunnel) weeps are rightly called weepers, being small rectangular openings in the side walls, through which all the water collected and collecting on the outside of the masonry pours into the inside.
New York Tribune, February 2, 1890.

4. The South American capuchin monkey, Cebus capucinus.

weepful (wē'fūl), a. [*< weep*¹, n., + -ful.] Full of weeping; mournful. Wyclif.

weeping (wē'ping), n. [< MF. wepinge, wepyng; verbal n. of weep.¹, v.] Wailing; lamentation; shedding of tears.

With myche wepyng & woo thes wordes he said.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.
Mat. viii. 12.

weeping-cross (wē'ping-kroś), n. A cross, often of stone, erected on or by the side of a highway, at which penitential devotions were performed.

One is a kind of weeping-cross, Jack,
A gentle purgatory.

Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, l. 1.

For here I mourn for your, our publick losse,
And doe my penance at the weeping-cross.

Wither, Prince Henry's Obeisques.

To return or come home by weeping-cross, to suffer defeat in some adventure; meet with repulse or failure; hence, to repent of having taken a certain course or engaged in a certain undertaking.

The judgement stands, onely this verdit too:
Had you before the law foreseen the losse,
You had not now come home by weeping-cross.

Heywood, If you Know not me (Works, ed. 1874, l. 287).

But the time will come when, comming home by Weeping-Cross, thou shalt confesse that it was better to be at home.

Lyly, Euphues and his England.

weepingly (wē'ping-li), adv. [< weeping + -ly.]
With weeping; in tears.

She took her son into her arms weepingly laughing.

Sir H. Wotton, Reliquie.

weeping-riper (wē'ping-rip), a. Ready to weep.
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.

Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 274.

weeping-spring (wē'ping-spring), n. A spring that very slowly discharges water.

weeping-widow (wē'ping-wid'ō), n. The guinea-hen flower, Fritillaria Meleagris. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

peetweet.] The wryneck, Lynx torquilla: from its cry. See cut under wryneck.

weefting, weeftingly. See witting, wittingly.

weeftless, a. An obsolete form of weelless.

weeftweest (wēt'wēt), n. Same as weeft⁴.

weever¹, n. Same as weaver-bird. Latham, 1782.

weever² (wē'vēr), n. [Formerly spelled weaver, and appar. a particular use of weaver¹. Zo-ologists now connect it with the L. specific name viper, as if weever were a var. of the obs.
viver.] Either one of two British fishes of the genus Trachinus, the greater, T. draco, 10 or 12 inches long, and the lesser, T. vipera, of half this length; hence, any member of the Trach- inidae (which see). These fishes have sharp dorsal and opercular spines, with which they may inflict a painful and serious wound when incautiously handled. It does not appear that the spines convey a specific poison, but they are smeared with a slime which causes the puncture they inflict to fester, like the similar wound from the tail-spine of the sting-ray. See cut under Trachinus.

weever-fish (wē'vēr-fish), n. Same as weever².

weevil (wē'vl), n. [Early mod. E. also weevil, weavel, wivel; < ME. wevel, wivel, weryl, wryel,
< AS. wifel, in an early gloss wibil, a beetle
(cf. wibba in scarn-wibba, dung-beetle), = OS.
wiril = MLG. werel = D. werel = OHG. wibil, wibel, MHG. wibel, G. wiebel, wibel, a weevil, = Icel. yfill (in comp. tord-yfill, dung-beetle).] 1. A snout-beetle; any coleopterous insect of the section Rhynchophora (which see). The term is more properly restricted to the long-snouted forms of the family Curculionidae, but is also extended (beyond the Rhynchophora) to the family Bruchidae. The weevils are almost exclusively plant-feeders; most of them live in nuts, grains, the stems of plants, rolled-up leaves, catkins, or fruit, while others are leaf-miners, and a few live in gall-like excrescences on the stems or roots of plants.
Brachytarsus contains the only carnivorous forms, and these are said to live on bark-lice. Some forms are sub-aquatic, as the water-weevil, Lissorhynchus simplex. See phrases following, and cut under Anthrenus, Balani- trachelus, diamond-beetle, Epicurus, pea-weevil, Pisodes, plum-gouger, Rhynchophora, and seed-weevil.

The wheat which is not turned is eaten with wivels.

Guesara, Letters (tr. by Bellows, 1577), p. 94.

About this time it chanced a pretty secret to be discovered to preserve their corn from the fly, or weasell, which did in a manner as much hurt as the rats.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 161.

The Thunder, which went to Bermuda the 17th October, now returned, bringing corn and goats from Virginia, (for the weavils had taken the corn at Bermuda before they came there). Winthrop, Hist. New England, l. 159.

2. Any insect which damages stored grain, as the fly-weevil, a local name in the southern United States for the grain-moth, Gelechia cerealella. See grain-moth, 2.—3. The larva of the wheat-midge, Diplosis tritici. Also called red weevil. C. V. Riley. [Western U. S.]—

Apple-blossom weevil, Anthrenus pomorum, which attacks the flower-buds of the apple in Europe.—Apple-weevil, Anthrenus quadrigibbus, a weevil which infests the fruit of the apple in the United States. Commonly called apple-curculio. See apple-curculio, and cut under Anthrenus.—Cabbage-weevil, Ceuthorrhynchus napi, whose larvae bore the crown of young cabbages in Europe, and which is supposed to have been introduced recently into the United States.—Chestnut-weevil, Balaninus caryatipes, a very long-nosed weevil whose larva is the common chestnut-grub of the United States.—Clover-weevil. (a) See clover-weevil (with cut). (b) Phytonomus punctatus, whose larvae feed on the leaves of clover in Europe and the United States. (c) Sitona crinitus and S. flavescens, which feed upon the leaves of clover in Europe, their larvae boring in the roots. The latter has been introduced into the United States.—Cranberry-weevil, An- thonomus nuttallii.—Grape-weevil. (a) Craponius in- aequalis, which attacks the fruit of the grape in the United States. (b) Otiorynchus sulcatus and O. picipes, which feed upon the leaves and shoots of the grape in Europe.

(c) Rhynchites betuleti, a formidable grape-pest in Europe, which rolls the leaves of the vine.—Hazelnut-weevil, Balaninus nucum.—Hickory-nut weevil, Balaninus nucum, whose larva is found commonly in hickory-nuts in the United States.—Imbricated weevil, Epicurus im- bricatus, of the United States. See Epicurus (with cut).— Ironwood leaf-weevil, an undetermined weevil which mines the leaves of ironwood in the United States.

—Leaf-rolling weevil, any weevil whose larva lives in a leaf-roll, as Attelabus bipunctulatus of the United States, whose larva rolls the leaves of oak.—New York weevil, Ithycerus novebor- acensis, the adult of which gnaws the twigs of fruit-trees in the United States, while its larva devours the interior of oak and hickory-twigs.—Oak-bark weevil, Magdalis olya, which lives under the bark of oak in the United States.—Palm-weevil, Rhynchophorus palmarius, R. ferrugineus, and allied species, which bore into the trunk of palm-trees. See palm-worm, under worm.—Pear-shaped weevil, any weevil of the genus Apion, as A. apri- cans, an enemy to clover in England. See cut under clover-weevil and seed-wee- vil.—Pitch-eating wee- vil, Pachyllobius picticornis, which lives under the bark of the pitch-pine in the United States.—Potato-stalk weevil, Trichobaris (or Baridius) trinitatus, a weevil whose larva bores the stalks of the potato in the middle United States.—Quinceweevil, Conotrachelus crataegi, which bores into the fruit of the quince in the United States.—Rhubarbweevil, Lixus concavus, which bores the stems of rhubarb in the middle United States.

—Rose-weevil, Aramis fulleri, whose larva bore in the roots of the rose.—Strawberry-weevil. (a) The strawberry-crown borer (which see, with cut, under straw- berry, Tyloschisma fraga-

ria, whose larva bores the stems of strawberry in the United States.

—White-pine weevil. See Pisodes (with cut). (See also acorn-weevil, bean-weevil, diamond-weevil, grain-weevil, nut-weevil, pea-weevil, pine-weevil, plum-weevil, rice-weevil, seed-weevil, water-weevil, wheat-weevil.)

weeviled, weevilled (wē'vld), a. [*< weevil +
-ed*.] Infested or infected with weevils, as grain.

weevily, weevilly (wē'vl-i), a. [< weevil + -y.]
Same as weeviled.

wee-wow¹ (wē'wou), a. [Appar. a redupl. var.
of wōw*, < AS. wōh, croaked.] Wrong. Hall- iwell. [Prov. Eng.] wee-wow² (wē'wou), v. [< wee-wow¹, a.] To twist about in an irregular manner. Halliwel.

[Prov. Eng.]

Quince-weevil (Conotrachelus crataegi).

a, side view; b, dorsal view.
(Line shows natural size.)

New York Weevil (Ithycerus noveboracensis).

a, stem punctured by larva; b, pupa; c, beetle.

weezelt, n. An old spelling of weasel.

weft¹ (weft), n. [< ME. weft, < AS. weft, wefta (= Icel. veftir, also vifta, vifta), threads woven into and crossing the warp; with formative -t, < wefan, weave: see weave.] 1. The threads, taken together, which run across the web from side to side, or from selvage to selvage. Also called woof.

The weft was so called from its being "wafted" in and out of the warp; it is also often called the woof, though more correctly the woof is the same as the web or finished stuff. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 206.

2. In bot., a name sometimes given to a felt-like stratum produced in certain fungi by abundantly closely interwoven hyphae.

The peripheral portion of the delicate hyphal weft.
De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 217.

weft², An obsolete form of the preterit and past participle of wave¹.

Ne can thy irrevocable destiny bee wefts.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 86.

weft³, n. Same as waif.

weft⁴ (weft), n. A dialectal form of waft, 3.

The strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 883.

weftaget (weft'tāj), n. [< weft¹ + -age.] Texture; the style or quality of the web, as of any textile fabric.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned, whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew, Museum. (Latham.)

weft-fork (weft'fōrk), n. 1. A device employed in some looms to lay in, piece by piece, a filling of slats, whalebone, palm-leaf, or other stiffen-ing material.—2: An early arrangement for stopping a loom in case of the failure of the weft-thread. It is essentially a weighted lever, which is supported by the weft-thread, and performs its action by falling in the event of the breakage or failure of the thread.

weft-hook (weft'hūk), n. A tool used to draw the filling through the warp in some kinds of hand-weaving, as in slat-weaving and some narrow-ware weaving or ribbon-weaving.

wegget, n. A Middle English form of wedge¹.

weght, weigh³, n. See wie.

weght, n. See wecht.

weghtness, n. Same as wightness.

wehet, n. See wighie.

wehrgeld, wehrgelt, n. See wergild.

wehrlite (wār'lit), n. [Named after Aloys Wehrle, an Austrian metallurgist and mining official (1791-1835).] A mineral obtained from Deutsch-Pilsen, in Hungary, in steel-gray folia with bright metallic luster and high specific gravity (8.4). It consists essentially of blismuth and tellurium, and some analyses show the presence of a small amount of silver. It is allied to tetradymite, but its exact composition is uncertain, and it is possible that more than one species may be included under the name.

wehr-wolff, n. See werwolf.

weil, n. An old spelling of way.

weibeyite, n. A rare fluo-carbonate of the metals of the cerium group, occurring in minute white crystals in southern Norway.

weid (wēd), n. Same as weed³.

Weierstrassian (vi-ēr-stras'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to, or named from, K. T. W. Weierstrass, a German mathematician (born 1816).

—Weierstrassian function. (a) One of the functions used in Weierstrass's method of treating elliptic functions.
(b) The function

$$fz = \sum_{n=0}^{\infty} b^n \cos(\alpha n) \pi z.$$

In certain cases, as when $p = 1, b < 1, ab > 1 + \frac{1}{2}$, this function, although continuous, has no differential coefficient.
In fact, the curve of the function, when seen at a distance, appears like a simple curve of sines; but when it is magnified, small waves are seen upon it; under a higher magnifying power, wavelets on these waves; and so on ad in- finitum; so that, although $f(x+h) - f(x)$ becomes infinitesimal with h , yet it has no limiting ratio to h .

Weigelia (wi-jē'liā), n. [Properly Weigela: named for C. E. Weigel, a German botanist.] See Diervilla.

Weigert's method. The method of tracing the course of the medullated nerve-fibers by hardening and staining them.

weigh¹ (wā), v. [Early mod. E. also way; < ME. weien, weyen, wegen (pret. wei, wai, wege, wie, wogh, pp. weien, wege, wie, wouin), < AS. wegan (pret. wæg, pp. wegen), carry, bear, also intr. move, = OE. fr. wega, weia = MD. wegen, D. wegen, weigh, = OHG. wegan, MHG. wegen, move, G. wegen in comp. bewegen, move, also in var. forms wiegen, rock, wägen, weigh, = Icel. vega, move, carry, lift, weigh, = Sw. väga, weigh, = Dan. veie, weigh, = Goth. gawigan, move, shake about, = OBulg. vesti, go, move, = L. vehere, carry, = Gr. ἐχεν, ὀχεῖσθαι = Skt.

✓ eah, go, move. The orig. sense 'carry' passed into that of 'raise, lift,' and thence into that of 'weigh.' Hence ult. (< AS. wegan, etc.) *wag*¹, wagon, *wain*¹, *way*¹, *weight*¹, whit, and (< L. vehere) vehicle, convection, etc.: see esp. *way*¹.] I. trans. 1. To raise or lift; bear up: as, to weigh anchor; to weigh a ship that has been sunk.

And so ye same mornynge we wayde our ancre and made sayle, and come into the foresayd haven at Mylo.

Sir R. Gylforde, Fylgrymage, p. 68.

[The ship] struck upon a rock, and, being forced to run ashore to save her men, could never be weighed since, although she lies a great height above the water.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 8.

2. To bear up or balance in order to determine the weight of; determine the relative heaviness of (something) by comparison in a balance with some recognized standard; ascertain the number of pounds, ounces, etc., in: as, to weigh sugar; to weigh gold.

Like stuffe haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the balance wherein mens deedes are weighed, and the Deuill lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice.

Purchase, Pilgrimage, p. 140.

The hunter took up his rifle instinctively from the corner of the room, weighed it in both hands held palm upward.

W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 297.

3. To consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion; compare; estimate deliberately and maturely; balance; ponder: as, to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a scheme.

In noble courage ought been areste,

And weyen every thing by equitee.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 398.

Wherefore I pray you weigh this with yourself the better, and see whether you can espy how your doctrine is doubtful.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 130.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., l.

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.

Shak., M. N. D., III. 2. 131.

4. To consider as worthy of notice; make account of; care for; regard; esteem.

You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me.

Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 27.

You are light, gentlemen,

Nothing to weigh your hearts.

Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, l. 1.

5. To outweigh or overpower; burden; oppress. See the following phrase.—To weigh down. (a) To preponderate over.

He weighs King Richard down.

Shak., Rich. II., III. 4. 89.

(b) To oppress with weight or heaviness; overburden; depress.

Thou [sleep] no more wilt weigh my eyelids down.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 1. 7.

II. intrans. 1. To weigh anchor; get under way or in readiness to sail.

When he was aboard his bark, he weighed and set sail, and shot off all his guns.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 232.

The vessel weighs, forsakes the shore,

And leaves us to the sight.

Cowper, The Bird's Nest.

2. To have weight, literally or figuratively.

Alliances, how near soever, weigh but light in the Scales of State.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 117.

3. To be or amount in heaviness or weight; be of equal effect with in the balance: as, a nugget weighs several ounces; a load which weighs two tons. The terms expressing the weight are in the adverbial objective. That which a balance measures is the proportionate acceleration of masses toward the center of the earth. This is equal to their proportionate masses; and mass is the important quantity determined. The weight, or attraction of gravitation (less the centrifugal force), differs at different stations, and is not determined by the operation of weighing.

And the Frenshe kyng gaue hym a goblet of syluer weynge filli. marke.

Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. lxxxvii.

Master Featherstone, O Master Featherstone, you may now make your fortunes weigh ten stone of feathers more than ever they did!

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

4. To be considered as important; have weight in the intellectual balance.

He finds . . . that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands . . . before him.

Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

Such considerations never weigh with them.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xci.

5. To bear heavily; press hard.

Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff

Which weighs upon the heart.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 45.

6. To consider; reflect.

My tongue was never old'd with "Here, an't like you,"

"There, I hearsech you"; weigh, I am a soldier,

And truth I covet only, no fine terms, sir.

Fletcher, Loyal Subject, II. 1.

The soldiers, less weighing because less knowing, clamoured to be led on against any danger.

Milton, Hist. Eng., II.

To weigh down, to sink by its own weight or burden.

The softness of the stalk, which maketh the bough, being over-loaded, . . . weigh down.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 610.

To weigh in, in sporting, to ascertain one's weight before the contest.

Whyte Melville, White Rose, I. xiv.

*weigh*¹ (wā), n. [*< weigh*¹, v.] A certain quantity or measure, estimated by weight; a measure of weight (compare wey); in the South Wales coal-fields, a weight of ten tons.

*weigh*² (wā), n. A misspelling of *way*¹, in the phrase under way, due to confusion with the phrase to weigh anchor.

We lost no time in getting under weigh again.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 230.

*weigh*³, n. See wegh.

weighable (wā'ā-bl), a. [*< weigh*¹ + -able.] Capable of being weighed.

weighage (wā'āj), n. [*< weigh*¹ + -age.] A rate or toll paid for the weighing of goods.

Imp. Dict.

weigh-bauk (wā'bāk), n. The beam of a balance; hence, in the plural, a pair of scales.

[Scotch.]

Capering in the air in a pair of weigh-bauks, now up, now down. Scott, Redgauntlet, xlv. (Knyc. Dict.) weigh-beam (wā'bēm), n. A weighing-scale carried by a wooden or iron horse, for convenience in weighing freight at a dock or railroad station; a portable scale used by custom-house weighers, etc.

weigh-board (wā'bōrd), n. In mining. See way-board.

weigh-bridge (wā'brij), n. A weighing-machine for weighing carts, wagons, etc., with their load.

weigh-can (wā'kan), n. A reservoir from which supplies are drawn, so connected with a scale that any desired weight may be conveniently drawn out.

weighed (wād), a. Balanced; experienced.

A young man not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

weigher (wā'ēr), n. [< ME. weyere (= MLG. weyere; *< weigh*¹ + -er.] 1. One who or that which weighs; an officer whose duty it is to weigh commodities or test weights.—2. The equalizer.

This same circle is cleped also the weyere (equalizer) of the day, for, when the some is in the hevedes of Aries and Libra, than then the daies and the nyhtes I like of length in the world.

Chaucer, Astrolobe, l. sec. 17.

Sacker and weigher. See *sacker*¹.

weighership (wā'ēr-ship), n. [< weigher + -ship.] The office of weigher.

weigh-house (wā'hous), n. A building (generally of a public character) at or in which goods are weighed by suitable apparatus.

He shall, with an hour's lying in the pulpit, get enough to find thirty or forty sturdy lubbers a month long, of which the weakest shall be as strong in the belly, when he cometh unto the manger, as the mightiest porter in the weigh-house.

Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 76.

weighing (wā'ing), n. [< ME. weyunge, weynge; verbal n. of *weigh*¹, v.] 1. The act of ascertaining weight.—2. As much as is weighed at once: as, a weighing of beef. Imp. Dict.—3. Same as weighing.

weighing-cage (wā'ing-kāj), n. A cage in which living animals, as pigs, sheep, and calves, may be conveniently weighed.

weighing-house (wā'ing-hous), n. Same as weigh-house.

weighing-machine (wā'ing-mā-shēn), n. Any contrivance by which the weight of an object may be ascertained, as the common balance, spring-balance, steelyard, etc.

See cuts under balance and steelyard. The term is, however, generally applied only to those contrivances which are employed for ascertaining the weight of heavy bodies, as the machines for the purpose of determining the weights of laden vehicles, machines for weighing cattle, machines for weighing heavy goods, as large casks, bales, etc. The hydro- static weighing-machine (see out) consists essentially of a strong cylinder within which moves a tightly packed piston, the space being filled with castor-oil; the loop above is attached to the cylinder and the ring below to the piston. When the object to be weighed is hung on the oil, and this passes by a Hydrostatic Weighing machine.

which indicates by the motion of the index on the dial the weight in pounds and tons.

weighing-scoop (wā'ing-skōp), n. A combined scoop and spring-balance. The spring is in the handle of the scoop, and while the scoop is being filled the spring is held in place by a stop controlled by the thumb. On raising the loaded scoop the stop is released, and the weight of the contents is indicated on the handle. E. H. Knight.

weigh-lock (wā'lok), n. A canal-lock at which barges are weighed and their tonnage is settled.

weighman (wā'man), n.; pl. weighmen (-men). A weigher. [Rare.]

Two weeks after the coopers' strike came the strike of the lightermen and weighmen.

U. S. Cons. Rep., No. lxxv. (1886), p. 206.

weigh-shaft (wā'shāft), n. In a steam-engine, a rocking-shaft or rocker-shaft.

*weight*¹ (wāt), n. [Formerly also weight; < ME. weight, weichte, weigte, weicht, wight, < AS. gewiht, weight, = MLG. wicht, gewicht = D. gewigt = OHG. gewiht*, MHG. gewiht, gewichte, G. gewicht, weight, = Icel. vætt = Sw. vigt = Dan. vægt, weight; with formative -t, < AS. wegan, etc., raise, lift: see *weigh*¹. The reg. mod. form would be wight (parallel with nicht, sight, etc.); the present vowel-form is due to conformity with the verb *weigh*¹.] 1. Downward force of a body; gravity; heaviness; ponderousness; more exactly, the resultant of the force of the earth's gravitation and of the centrifugal pressure from its axis of rotation, considered as a property of the body affected by it. Considerable confusion has existed between weight and mass, the latter being the quantity of matter as measured by the ratio of the momentum of a body to its velocity. Weight, in this the proper sense of the word, is something which varies with the latitude of the station at which the heavy body is, being greater by $\frac{1}{16}$ of itself at the poles than at the equator; it also varies considerably with the elevation above the sea ($\frac{1}{16}$ for every kilometer). The weights of different bodies at one and the same station were proved, by Newton's experiments with pendulums of different material, to be in the ratio of their masses, and irrespective of their chemical composition; consequently, a balance which shows the equality of weight of two bodies at one station also shows the equality of their masses. In determining the specific gravity of a body, it is hung by a fine thread to one pan of the balance, and immersed completely in water. The reduced number of pounds, ounces, etc., which is required in the other pan to balance the first, under these circumstances, is called the weight of the body in water. In like manner, we speak of the weight in air and the weight in water. These expressions forbid our conceiving of weight as synonymous with the quantity of matter; and yet, when a pound is said to be a unit of weight, although it is intended to be carried up mountains and to distant places, mass, or quantity of matter, must be understood, since there is no important quantity but the quantity of matter which a pound or a kilogram measures. The confusion is increased when the pound is defined, as it still is in the United States, by the weight of a certain standard in air, without reference to the height of the barometer and thermometer. In the older books on mechanics, a pound is taken as a force, and the quantity of matter is obtained by dividing the weight by the measure of gravity; but now both the theoretical books and the legal definitions of the standards used in weighing make the pound, kilo, etc., to be masses, or quantities of matter, whose weight is obtained by multiplying them by the acceleration of gravity at any station. Nevertheless, the older system still finds a few supporters. It was long after Galileo had firmly established the law of falling bodies before it occurred to anybody that weight was a force. Gravity, so far as common observation shows, draws bodies to the earth alone, and that in parallel lines, and Galileo had shown that it accelerates all bodies alike, whether they are great or small, so that there was nothing to suggest the idea of force, especially as that idea was then in its infancy, and had not attained its present prominence in the minds of men. Weight in those days being looked upon as a property of single bodies, and not as subsisting between pairs of bodies, was necessarily confounded with mass; and a mental inertia, or natural clinging to old conceptions, kept up the confusion after Newton had demonstrated the true law of gravitation. For the units of weight, see def. 5. Abbreviated wt.

Atlas that I blighte

Of pure gold a thousand pound of weighte.

Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 182.

So Belgian mounds bear on their shattered sides

The sea's whole weight, increased with swelling tides.

Addison, The Campaign.

Though a pound or a gramme is the same all over the world, the weight of a pound or a gramme is greater in high latitudes than near the equator.

Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, Art. xlvii.

2. Mass; relative quantity of matter.—3. A heavy mass; specifically, something used on account of its weight or its mass. Thus, the usefulness of the weights that a man holds in his hands in leaping or jumping lies in the addition they impart to his momentum, and their dragging him down is a disadvantage; but the weights of a clock are for giving a downward pull, and their momentum is practically nothing.

A man leappeth better with weights in his hands than without.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 609.

Both men and women in Cochlin account it a great Gallantry to haue wide eares, which therefore they stretch by arte, hanging weights on them till they reach to their shoulders.

Purchase, Pilgrimage, p. 404.

Impartial Justice holds her equal Scales,
Till stronger Virtue does the Weight incline.

Prior, Ode to the Queen, st. 10.

"When I said I would match you, I meant with even weight; you ride four stone lighter than I." "Very well, but I am content to carry weight." Scott, Rob Roy, III.

4. Specifically, a body of determinate mass, intended to be used on a balance or scale for measuring the weight or mass of the body in the other pan or part of the scale (as the platform in a platform-scale).—5. A system of units for expressing the weight or mass of bodies. Avoirdupois weight is founded on the avoirdupois pound (see pound), which is equal to 453.59237 grams. It is divided into 16 ounces, and each ounce into 16 drams; 112 (in the United States commonly 100) pounds make a hundredweight, and 20 hundredweights a ton. (See ton.) The stone is 14 pounds. Troy weight is founded on the troy pound, which is 373.242 grams. It is divided into 12 ounces, each ounce into 20 pennyweights, and each pennyweight into 24 grains. But formerly the pennyweight was divided into 32 real grains. There was also an ideal subdivision of the grain into 30 mites, each of 24 droplets, each of 20 perits, each of 24 blanks. The goldsmiths also divided the ounce troy into 24 carats of 4 grains each for gold and silver, and into 150 carats of 4 grains each for diamonds. Troy weight, formerly employed for many purposes, is now only used for gold and silver. Apothecaries' weight, still used in the United States for dispensing medicine, divides the troy ounce into 8 drams, each dram into 8 scruples, and each scruple into 20 grains, which are identical with troy grains. For weight in the metric system, see metric.
6. Pressure; burden; care; responsibility.

A wise Chieftain never trusts the weight
Of th' execution of a braue Exploit
But unto those whom he most honoureth.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 7.

The weight of mightiest monarches.

Milton, P. L., II. 307.

Why does that lovely Head, like a fair Flow'r Oppress'd with Drops of a hard-falling Show'r, Bend with its Weight of Grief? Congreve, To Cynthia.

7. In coal-mining, subsidence of the roof due to pressure from above, which takes effect as the coal is worked away. In long-wall working, the weight is usually of importance, as causing the coal, after it has been holed, to "get itself"—that is, to break down without the necessity of using powder, wedges, or something similar. Properly, "weight" is the cause and "weighting" the result, but the two words are often used with nearly the same meaning.

8. Importance; specifically, the importance of a fact as evidence tending to establish a conclusion; efficacy; power of influencing the conduct of persons and the course of events; effective influence in general. In calculations by least squares, the weight assigned to an observation is its effect upon the result, expressed by its equivalence to a certain number of concordant observations of standard accuracy.

It happens many times that, to urge and enforce the matter we speak of, we go still mounting by degrees and encreasing our speech with words or with sentences of more weight one then another, & is a figure of great both efficacy & ornament. . . . We call this figure by the Greeke original, the Auaneor or figure of encrease, because euery word that is spoken is one of more weight then another. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 132.

For well enough they understood
The matter was of weight.

Battle of Batrinus (Child's Ballads, VII. 223).

As men are in quality and as their services are in weight for the public good, so likewise their rewards and encouragements . . . might somewhat declare how the state itself doth accept their pains.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

If the people of Ireland were a united nation, it is conceivable that their demand for autonomy would have weight.

Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 508.

9. In med., a sensation of oppression or heaviness over the whole body or over a part of it, as the head or stomach.—Atomic weight. See atomic.—Dead weight, the pressure produced by a heavy body supported in a state of rest by anything: used literally and figuratively.

The huge dead weight of stupidity and indolence is always ready to smother audacious enquiries.

Lestie Stephen, Eng. Thought, l. 17.

I feel so free and so clear
By the loss of that dead weight.

Tennyson, Maud, xix. 10.

Fisherman's weight. See fisherman.—Gross weight, the weight before deduction for tare, impurity, or other similar correction: in contradistinction to net or net weight.—Lay, net, iron weight. See the qualifying words.—Mercurial weight thermometer. Same as overheating thermometer (which see, under thermometer).—Molecular weight, the weight of a molecule, that of hydrogen being taken as the standard.—Weight of an observation, the number of ordinary observations to which it is considered as equivalent in the deduction of the most probable value. Compare def. 8.—Weight of a reciprocal. See reciprocal.—Weight of metal, the weight of iron capable of being thrown at one discharge from all the guns of a ship.—Weight of wind, in organ-building, the degree of compression in the air furnished by the bellows to a particular stop or group of stops. The usual pressure is sufficient to raise a column of water in a U-tube about 3 inches.

weight¹ (wāt), v. t. [< weight¹, n.] 1. To add or attach a weight or weights to; load with additional weight; add to the heaviness of.

Some of the [balance] poles are weighted at both ends, but ours are not. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor.

2. In dyeing, to load (the threads) with minerals or other foreign matters mixed with the dyes, for the purpose of making the fabrics appear thick and heavy.

Barytes . . . is used for weighting, that is, for giving weight and apparent body and firmness to inferior goods. O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 74.

3. In founding, to bind (the parts of a flask) together by means of weights placed on the top, in order to prevent the bursting of the flask under the pressure of the liquid metal.

weight² (wāt), n. See weight.

weightily (wā'ti-li), adv. In a weighty manner.

(a) Heavily; ponderously. (b) With force or impressiveness; with moral power.

weightiness (wā'ti-nes), n. The state or quality of being weighty; ponderousness; heaviness, literally or figuratively; solidity; force; importance.

The weightiness that was upon their spirits and countenances keeping down the lightness that would have been up in us. T. Eliwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 192.

The weightiness of any argument. Locke.

The weightiness of the adventure. Sir J. Hayward.

weighting (wā'ting), n. [Verbal n. of weight¹, v.] In coal-mining, subsidence or other disturbance in a coal-mine due to "weight," or pressure of the overlying mass of rock. A mine in which such subsidence is taking place is said to be "on the weight." [Eng.]

weightless (wāt'les), a. [< weight¹ + -less.] 1. Having no weight; imponderable; light.

That light and weightless down.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 38.

2. Of no importance or consideration.

And so [they] are oft-times emboldened to rouse upon them as from aloft very weak and weightless discourses.

Bp. Hall, Apol. against Brownists, § 1.

weight-nail (wāt'nāl), n. In ship-building, a nail somewhat similar to a deck-nail, but not so fine, and with a square head, used for fastening cleats, etc.

weight-rest (wāt'rest), n. A form of lathe-rest which is held firmly upon the shears by a weight hung beneath. F. H. Knight.

weighty (wā'ti), a. [Early mod. E. also waigh-tie, weighty; < weight¹ + -y.] 1. Having considerable weight; heavy; ponderous.

Yorke. I pray you, Vncle, giue me this Dugger. . . .

Glo. It is too weighty for your Grace to weare.

Shak., Rich. III. (fol. 1023), III. 1.

2. Burdensome; hard to bear.

He was beholding to the Romanes, that enased him of so weightie a burthen, and lessened his cares of government. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 84.

The cares of empire are great, and the burthen which lies upon the shoulders of princes very weighty.

Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. viii.

3. Important; serious; momentous; grave.

Nor for no fauour sould promote thame
To that most gret and weighty cure.

Lauder, Dewtie of Kingis (E. E. T. S.), l. 297.

This secret is so weighty 'twill require
A strong faith to conceal it.

Shak., Hon. VIII., II. 1. 144.

My head is full of thoughts

More weighty than thy life or death can be.

Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, III. 2.

4. Adapted to affect the judgment or to convince; forcible; cogent.

Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.

Shak., Macbeth, III. 1. 126.

Skillful diplomatists were surprised to hear the weighty observations which at seventeen the prince made on public affairs.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., VII.

5. Grave or serious in aspect or purport.

Things . . .

That bear a weighty and a serious brow.

Shak., Hen. VIII., Prol., l. 2.

She looked upon me with a weighty countenance, and fetched a deep sigh, crying out, "O the cumber and entanglements of this vain world!"

Penn, Travels in Holland, etc.

6. Authoritative; influential; important.

The weightiest men in the weightiest stations. Swift.

The grave and weighty men who listened to him approved his words.

Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 257.

7. Severe; rigorous; afflictive.

We banish thee for ever. . . .

If, after two days' shine, Athens contain thee,
Attend our weightier judgement.

Shak., T. of A., III. 5. 102.

weik, n. See weel 3.

weil¹, n. Same as weel 1.

Weil's disease. An infectious disease, having a course of about ten days, characterized by jaundice, muscular pains, enlargement of the liver and spleen, and fever. Also called acute infectious jaundice.

welly, adv. A dialectal form of welly.

Well, I'm welly brosten, as they sayn in Lancashire. Swift, Polite Conversation, II. (Davies.)

Weingarten's theorem. See theorem.

Weinmannia (win-man'i-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1763), named after J. W. Weinmann, a German apothecary.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Saxifragaceae and tribe Cunoniaceae. It is characterized by flowers with imbricated sepals, four or five petals, eight or ten long stamens inserted on the base of a free disk, and small oblong, commonly pilose seeds. There are about 60 species, principally of tropical or south temperate regions, occurring in America, Australia, New Zealand, and the Mascarene and Pacific islands. They are trees or shrubs with opposite branchlets, opposite coriaceous, often glandular leaves, odd-pinnate with a winged rachis. The small white flowers are disposed in simple terminal or axillary erect racemes, followed by small coriaceous two-celled capsules splitting into two sharp boat-like valves. Some species afford a soft light wood used in carpentry and cabinet-work. A Peruvian species yields an astringent bark utilized in tanning. W. tinctoria is employed in the Isle of Bourbon in dyeing red. W. pinnata, a tree with downy branches, native from the West Indies and Mexico to Guiana, is known in Jamaica as bastard brazil. W. Benthami, an evergreen tree of New South Wales, reaches 100 feet high; 4 others are Australian, and 2 occur in New Zealand, of which W. sylvicola, a small tree with blackish bark, is now cultivated in England, and W. racemosa is known as the tawai-bark tree.

weir, wear³ (wēr), n. [The spelling weir is irreg. and appar. Sc.; the proper spelling is weir; early mod. E. wear, weare, weare, sometimes wire; < ME. wer (dat. were), < AS. wer, a weir, dam, fence, hedge, inclosure, = G. wehr, a weir, dam, dike, = Icel. vör, a fenced-in landing-place; from the root of AS. werian, protect, guard, defend, etc., also fence, dam: see wear 2.] 1. A dam erected across a river to stop and raise the water, as for the purpose of taking fish, of conveying a stream to a mill, of maintaining the water at the level required for navigating it, or for purposes of irrigation.

Half the river fell over a high weir, with all its appendages of bucks, and hatchways, and eel-baskets. Into the Nin's-pool. Kingsley, Yeast, III.

2. A fence, as of twigs or stakes, set in a stream for catching fish. Weirs differ from pounds principally in being constructed, in whole or in part, of brush or of narrow boards, with or without netting; and they are sometimes arranged so that at low tide a sand-bar cuts off the escape of the fish, leaving them in a basin, and allowing them to be taken at any time before a certain stage of rise of the next tide. Weirs are of two kinds, the shoal-water weir and the deep-water weir. The shoal-water weir, as illustrated in fig. 1, has a leader L, which is a row of stakes, generally woven with brush, leading out from the shore. Its extremity is at the entrance of the big pound M. The big pound is likewise of stakes filled with brush, and its entrance 30 feet wide. This leads by a passage 5 feet wide into the little pound N, and this into the pocket O, which is a frame about 16 feet long and 10 feet wide, with sides of netting, and a board floor. The fish following the shore meet the leader, turn and follow it into the big pound; here they follow the side around until they pass into the little pound, and from that into the pocket, where they are left by the receding tide and taken out at low water. The deep-water weir (fig. 2) has a similar leader A, extending to the entrance of the big pound, or heart, B, beyond which are the small pound C and the bowl D, into which the fish finally go. The form of the inclosures in both cases leads the fish constantly forward, and they rarely or never find their way back through the passages. In both figures E represents the land or high-water mark, and F the low-water mark.

The day following we came to Chippanum, where the people were flood, but their weirs afforded us fish.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

Deep-water weir. See def. 2.—Dry weir, a weir on a flat which is left bare at ebb-tide.—Half-tide weir, a fish-weir so placed that the fish taken can be removed at half-ebb or half-tide, without waiting for low tide, as is generally done.—Lock-weir, a weir having a lock-chamber and gates. F. H. Knight.—Shoal-water weir. See def. 2.—Slut weir. See slut.

weirangle, n. Same as warriangle. Willughby.
weird (wērd), n. [Formerly also wierd; < ME. werde, wierde, wirde, wyrd, wurde, < AS. wyrd, wīrd, wurd, destiny, fate, also, personified, one of the Fates (= OS. wurth = MD. wrd, wrth = OHG. wurt, MHG. wurth, fate, death, = Icel. urthr, fate, one of the three Norns or Fates), < weorthan (pret. pl. wurdon), etc., become, happen: see worth 1. The spelling weird is Sc.] 1. Fate; destiny; luck.

The weirds that we clopen destinee.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2580.
 I was youngest,
 And aye my weird it was the hardest!
Cospatrick (Child's Ballads, I. 155).
 My weird maun be fulfilled.

Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xli.
 For the personification of Weird or Destiny, see Kemble, Saxons in England, l. 400: "It shall befall us as Weird de-cideth, the lord of every man."
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 386.

2. A prediction.

His mither in her weirds
 Foretold his death at Troy.
Poems in Buchan Dialect, p. 18. (Jamieson.)

3. A spell; a charm.

Scott, (Imp. Dict.)—

After word comes weird; fair fall them that call me Madam.
Scott's Proverb. (Jamieson.)

5. The Fates personified. [Rare.]

Wo worth (quoth the Weirds) the wights that thee wrought.
Montgomery, in Watson's Coll. (Jamieson.)

To dree one's or a weird. See dree.

weird (wěrd), a. [Not directly < weird, n., but first in the phrase weird sisters, an awkward expression, lit. 'the fate sisters,' appar. meant for 'the Sister Fates'; but perhaps weird was thought to be an actual adjective meaning 'fatal.' No such adjective use is known in ME. The second use (def. 2) is due to an erroneous notion of the meaning of the phrase the weird sisters, which has been taken to mean
 'the sisters who look witch-like or uncanny.']

1. Connected with fate or destiny; able to influence fate.

Makbeth and Banquo . . . met be ye gait thro women clothit in elrage and uncouth weid. They wer jugit be the pepill to be weird sisters. Boethius (tr. by Bellenden).

2. Of or pertaining to witches or witchcraft; supernatural; hence, unearthly; suggestive of witches, witchery, or unearthliness; wild; uncanny.

Out of the hardened clay and marl of the lake bottoms the elements are carving some of the weirdest scenery on the face of the earth. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, li. 8.

We heard the hawks at twilight play, . . .
 The loon's weird laughter far away.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

The weird sisters, the Fates.

The remanent hereof, quhat euer be it,
 The weird sisters defendis that suld be wit.
G. Douglas, Eneid, iii.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters.
Shak., Macbeth, li. 1. 20.

weird (wěrd), v. t. [Formerly also wierd; < weird, n.] 1. To destine; doom; change by witchcraft or sorcery.

I weird ye to a fiery beast,
 And relieved sail ye never be.
Kempion (Child's Ballads, I. 139).

Say, what hath forged thy wierded link of destiny with the House of Avenel?
Scott, Monastery, I. 231.

2. To warn solemnly; adjure.

O hyde at hame, my gude Lord Weir,
 I weird ye hyde at hame.
Jamieson (Child's Ballads, III. 308).

weirdless (wěrd'les), a. [< weird + -less.] Ill-fated; luckless.

Wae be to that weirdless wicht,
 And a' his witcherie.
Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 325).

weirdly (wěrd'li), adv. In a weird manner;
 with a weird or unearthly effect or appearance.

weirdness (wěrd'nes), n. The state of being weird, or of inspiring a sort of unaccountable or superstitious dread or fear; eeriness.
Contemporary Rev.

weir-fishing (wēr'fish'ing), n. The method or practice of taking fish by means of a weir.

weir-table (wēr'tā'bl), n. A record or memorandum used to estimate the quantity of water that will flow in a given time over a weir of given width at different heights of the water.

weise (wēz), v. t. A Scotch form of wise.
weism (wē'izm), n. [< we + -ism, in imitation of egotism.] The frequent use of the pronoun
we. Antijacobin Rev. [Cant.] (Imp. Dict.)

Weitbrecht's cartilage. An interarticular cartilage in the acromioclavicular joint.

Weitbrecht's ligament. A thin band of fibers passing between the radius and ulna in the forearm.

weivet, v. An old spelling of waive.

wejack, n. The fisher, or Pennant's marten.
 See fisher (with cut).

weka rail. See Ocydromus.

weke¹, n. A Middle English form of wick.

weke², a. and v. An old spelling of weak.

wekes (wēk), interj. [Of weeek, squeak.] An imitation of the squeaking of an infant or a pig.

Weke, weke / so cries a pig prepared to the spit.
Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 146.

wekett, n. A Middle English form of wicket.

wekyd, a. A Middle English form of wicked.

welt, adv. An old spelling of well.

welat, adv. An occasional Middle English form of well, as in wela wylle, very wild, wela wyne,
 very joyful, etc.

Wela-wynne is the wort that woxes ther-oute,
 When the donkande dewe dropez of the leuez,
 To hide a blisful blusch of the bryzt sunne.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 518.

Welawylle watz the way, ther thay bi wod schulden,
Til hit watz sone sesoun that the sunne ryges.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2084.

welaway, welawot, interj. and n. See well- away.

Welch (welch), a. and n. An obsolete form of Welsh.

Welcker's sphenoidal anglé. The angle formed by the junction, at the middle of the crest separating the optic grooves from the pituitary fossa, of lines drawn to this point from the basion and from the nasofrontal suture.

welcome (wel'kum), a. [< ME. welcome, wel- come, wilcome, wilecome, wileume, wilcome, wil- kume, welcom, used in predicate and orig. a noun, < AS. wileuma, one whose coming suits the will or wish of another, one who is received with pleasure, a welcome guest (= OIG. willic- kome, one who is received with pleasure, MHG.
willekumen, G. willkommen, welcome, = MD. wil- lekom, welkom, D. welkom, adj., welcome); < wil- la, will, wish, pleasure, + cuma, one who comes, a comer: see will and come. In ME. the word becomes confused with a similar form of Scand.
 origin, namely Icel. welkominn (= Sw. välkommen = Dan. velkommen, welcome, lit. 'well come,' like F. bien venu), < vel, etc. (= E. well), + kominn, etc., = E. come, pp.; but these forms were prob. orig. identical with the AS. D. and G. The adj. use is due to the position of the noun in the predicate, and in greeting, where it could still be regarded as a noun.] 1. Gladly received for intercourse or entertainment; esteemed as one whose coming or presence is agreeable; held as doing well to come: as, a welcome guest or visitor; you are always welcome here; to make a visitor feel welcome. Sometimes used elliptically as a word of greeting to a comer or comers: as, welcome home; bid our friends welcome.

Welcome, friends! but I wolde frayne

How fare go with that faire woman?
York Plays, p. 194.

Ye're welcome here, my young Redin,
 For coal and candle light.
Young Redin (Child's Ballads, III. 13).

Politeness and good breeding are equally necessary to make you welcome and agreeable in conversation and common life. Chesterfield, Letters.

2. Conferring gladness on receipt or presentation; such that its perception or acquisition gives pleasure; gladly received into knowledge or possession: as, welcome news; a welcome relief.

A welcome present to our master.

Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, v. 3.

Although my thoughts seem sad, they are welcome to me.

Fletcher, Wife for a Month, l. 1.

They were a welcome sight to see.

Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 114).

3. Gladly or willingly permitted, privileged, or the like; free to have, enjoy, etc.: as, you are welcome to do as you please; he is welcome to the money, or to all his honors.

Lod. Madam, good-night: I humbly thank your lady-ship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.
Shak., Othello, iv. 3. 4.

= syn. 1 and 2. Acceptable, agreeable, gratifying, pleasant.

welcome (wel'kum), v. t.; pret. and pp. wel- comed, ppr. welcoming. [< ME. welcumen, wil- cumen, wilcomen, wilcumen, welcumen, < AS. wil- cumian (= G. be-willkommen), welcome, treat as a welcome guest, < wilcuma, a welcome guest:
 see welcome, a.] To greet the coming of with pleasure; salute with a welcome; receive gladly or joyfully: as, to welcome a friend, or the break of day.

Thel . . . come to logres the thirde day, and ther were thei richly welcomed. Martin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 447.

A brow unbent that seem'd to welcome woe.

Shak., Lucrece, l. 1509.

welcome (wel'kum), n. [< welcome, v.] 1. The act of bidding or making welcome; a kindly greeting to one coming.

The camp receiv'd him with acclamations of joy and welcome. Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, l. 1.

The Guardian and Friars receiv'd us with many kind welcomes, and kept us with them at Supper.
Maunderell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 67.

2. Kind or hospitable reception of a guest or new-comer.

Who'er has travell'd life's dull round, Where'er his stages may have been,
 May sigh to think he still has found
 The warmest welcome at an Inn.
Shenstone, Written on the Window of an Inn.

To bid a welcome, to receive with professions of friendship, kindness, or gladness.

To thee and thy company I bid
 A hearty welcome. Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 111.

welcomely (wel'kum-li), adv. [< welcome +
-ly.] In a welcome manner.

Juvenal, . . . by an handsome and metrical expression, more welcomely engrafs it into our junior memories.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 4. welcomeness (wel'kum-nes), n. The state of being welcome; agreeableness; kind reception.

 [Rare.]

The poor little fellow pressed it upon them with a nod of welcomeness. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 87.

welcomer (wel'kum-er), n. [< welcome + -er.]
 One who welcomes, or salutes or receives kindly a new-comer.

Thou woful welcomer of glory.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 1. 90.

weld¹, wold² (weld, wöld), n. [Also Sc. wald; < ME. welde, walde, wolde, weld, dyers' yellow- wood; cf. D. wouw = Sw. Dan. vau = G. wau, waude, wied (> F. gaude = Sp. gualda = Pg. gualde), weld. Further connections uncertain.
 Some compare road, and, for the root, the verb well, boil.] The dyer's-weed, Rhus typhala, a scentless species of mignonette, native in southern Europe and naturalized further north.
 It was formerly much cultivated as a dye-plant, its pods affording a permanent yellow suited to both animal and vegetable fibers, later displaced, however, by quercitron, flavin, and the aniline dyes. Its seeds yield a drying-oil.
 Also yellow-weed, and sometimes wood or wild wood.

weld² (weld), v. [Ult. a variant, through the Scand. forms, of well, boil: see well.] 1. trans.

1. To unite or consolidate, as pieces of metal or a metallic powder, by hammering or compression with or without previous softening by heat. Welding is and has long been a matter of great practical importance, chiefly in the manufacture of iron and steel, and of the various tools, utensils, and implements made of those metals. Iron has the valuable property of continuing in a kind of pasty condition throughout a wide range of temperature below its melting-point, and this is a circumstance highly favorable to the process of welding. Most metals, however, pass quickly, when sufficiently heated, from a solid to a liquid condition, and with such welding is more difficult. The term welding is more generally used when the junction of the pieces is effected without the actual fusing point of the metal having been reached. Sheets of lead have sometimes been united together by fusing the metal with a blowpipe along the two edges in contact with each other, and this has been called autogenous soldering, or burning. If the heating was done with a hot iron. Still, "the difference between welding and autogenous soldering is only one of degree" (Perrey).
 The term welding is also used in speaking of the uniting of articles not metallic. Most metals when in the form of powder can be consolidated or welded into a perfectly homogeneous mass by sufficient pressure, without the aid of heat. The same is true of various non-metallic substances, such as graphite, coal, and probably many others.
 A method of welding has been recently invented by Elihu Thomson, which appears to be capable of being employed with a variety of metals on a very extensive scale. In this, which is known as electric welding, a current of electricity heats the abutting ends of the two objects which are to be welded, these being pressed together by mechanical force, and so arranged with reference to the electric current that there is a great and rapid accumulation of heat at the joint, in consequence of the greater relative conductivity of the rest of the circuit. This method of welding in some cases partakes of the nature of autogenous soldering, the pieces of metal being actually fused while uniting; in other cases, as with iron, nickel, or platinum, the union takes place without fusion, as in ordinary welding. In electric welding the pressure which forces the metallic surfaces together may, in the case of a plastic metal like iron, be either quiet or percussive in character; in autogenous soldering a more delicate and quiet pressure is generally preferred. In case of large articles hydraulic pressure can be used to force their surfaces into contact with each other.

To weld anew the chain
 On that red anvil where each blow is pain.
Whittier, A Word for the Hour.

2. Figuratively, to bring into intimate union; make a close joining of: as, to weld together the parts of an argument.

How he . . . slow re-wrought,
 That language—welding words into the crude Mass from the new speech round him.
Browning, Sordello, li.

II. intrans. To undergo the welding process;
 be capable of being welded.

weld² (weld), n. [< *weld*², v.] A solid union of metallic pieces formed by welding; a welded junction or joint.

Sound welds are very difficult to make in wire, and are not to be trusted. R. S. Cullkey, Pract. Teleg., § 811.

weld³, v. t. A Middle English form of wield. weldability (wel-da-bil'i-ti), n. [< weldable + -ity (see -bility).] Capability of being welded.

The above-mentioned elements harden malleable iron, and probably affect its weldability by their ready oxidizability. W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 8.

weldable (wel'da-bl), a. [< weld² + -able.] Capable of being welded.

weld-bore (wel'dbör), n. A kind of woolen cloth made at Bradford, in Yorkshire, England. Dict. of Needlework.

welder¹ (wel'dër), n. [< weld² + -er¹.] One who welds, or an instrument or appliance for welding.

welder², n. An obsolete form of wielder.

welding-heat (wel'ding-hët), n. See heat.

welding-machine (wel'ding-ma-shën'), n. A machine by which the edges of plates previously bent are joined. The edges are made to lap inside a chamber, and are exposed to a gas-flame, whence the joint is passed beneath a gang of rolls or a hammer.

welding-powder (wel'ding-pou'dër), n. A flux for use in heating metal for welding, consisting of a calcined powder formed from borax and other ingredients.

The steel to be welded . . . is then dipped into the welding powder, and again placed in the fire. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 361.

welding-swage (wel'ding-swäj), n. A block or a fulling-tool used in closing a welded joint. E. H. Knight.

weld-iron (wel'd'irn), n. A name sometimes applied to wrought-iron. This name was recommended by an international committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted; indeed the institute did not accept the report of its committee in so far as this modification of the established nomenclature of iron is concerned.

weldless (wel'dles), a. [< weld + less.] Having no welds; made without welding.

It is their intention to lay down plant for the construction of boilers built up of weldless rings. The Engineer, LXIX. 267.

weld-steel (wel'dstël), n. Puddled steel. This name was suggested by a committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted.

weldy (wel'di), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of wieldy.

welst. A Middle English form of weal, well².

welfare¹, a. Another spelling of wealful.

welw¹, v. A Middle English form of wallow².

First a man groweth as dooth a gras,
And anon after welw¹eth as flouris of hay.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 173.

welfare (wel'fär), n. [< ME. welfare (= MLG. wolfare); < well² + fare¹.] 1. A state or condition of doing well; prosperous or satisfactory course or relation; exemption from evil; state with respect to well-being: as, to promote the physical or the spiritual welfare of society; to inquire after a friend's welfare: to be anxious about the welfare of a ship at sea.

My daughter's welfare I do feare.
The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 332).

Irring, Sketch-Book, p. 30.

well¹ (wel), n. [< ME. wel (well-), also welle, wulle, < AS. well, wyll, also wella, wylla, a well, spring (= MD. welle, D. wel = OHG. wella, MHG. G. welle, a wave, billow, surge, = Icel. vella, boiling, ebullition, = Dan. vøll (for vøll), a spring), < weallan, boil: see wall², and cf. wall², n., and well¹, v.] 1. A natural source of water; a place where water springs up in or issues from the ground; a spring or well-spring; a fountain. As soon as a spring begins to be utilized as a source of water-supply it is more or less thoroughly transformed into a well. (See def. 4.) This is necessary, both for rendering the access to it convenient, and for giving the water a chance to accumulate and be protected when not needed for use. Hence the word spring is much used by geologists in describing the natural sources of water-supply, and well, by those indicating the manner in which the supply has been made available. There is, however, no sharp distinction possible between the two words. Thus, Prestwich speaks of the "beautiful spring [between Cirencester and Cheltenham] known as the Seven Wells," and Phillips of a "feeble intermittent spring [issuing from Giggleswick Scar, in Yorkshire] known as the Ebbing and Flowing Well."

Ther were a fewe wellles Came renning fro the cliffes adoun.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 160.

Ther sprong wellles thre, . . .
Of watyr bothe fayr & good.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 118.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 15.

He deep comfort hath
Who, thirsting, drinks cool waters from a well.
R. W. Glider, The Celestial Passion, Love and Death.

Hence—2. The source whence any series or order of things issues or is drawn; a well-spring of origin or supply; a fount in the figurative sense.

He that is of worthinesse the wellle.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 178.

Dan Chaucer, well of English undefeiled.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 32.

3. That which flows or springs out or up from a source; water or other fluid issuing forth.

And from his gored wound a well of bloud did gush.
Spenser, F. Q., i. iii. 35.

The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. John iv. 14.

4. A pit, hole, or shaft sunk in the ground, either by digging or by boring through earth and rock, to obtain a supply of water, or of other fluid, as mineral water, brine, petroleum, or natural gas, from a subterranean source, and walled or otherwise protected from caving in. Wells are generally cylindrical, and are sometimes bored to a depth of several hundreds or thousands of feet. (See Artesian well, under Artesian. See also oil-well, tube-well.) From ordinary wells for domestic use the water is raised in vessels—generally buckets hung in pairs to a windlass or singly to a well-sweep—or, as from deeper wells, by pumping.

'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door;
but 'tis enough. Shak., E. and J., III. i. 99.

The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket which hung in the well.
S. Woodworth, The Old Oaken Bucket.

You were certain, by a sort of fate, to stop, in passing,
at the well in the front yard for a drink.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 51.

5. A cavity, or an inclosed space, shaft, or the like, in some way comparable to or suggestive of an ordinary well, but of some other origin or use: as, an ink-well.

The veriest old well of a shivering best parlour.
Dickens, Christmas Carol, II.

Through a most unsavory alley into a court, or rather space, serving as a well to light the rear range of a tenement house.
T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, iv.

She had gotten it in a great well of a cupboard.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlv.

The well . . . must be a square hole, a little larger than the plate [for etching], and about an inch deep.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 166.

There must be perfect drainage insured from the bottom of the well [the receptacle for ice in an ice-house], so that the ice will be kept dry.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 364.

Specifically—(a) In a building, a compartment or shaft extending through the different floors, or from top to bottom, in which the stairs are placed, or round which they turn; or one in which an elevator or lift moves up and down; or one which serves for the admission of air or light to interior rooms, etc. The kinds of well named are distinctively called a well-staircase or (for the space interior to the stairs) a well-hole, an elevator-shaft, and an air- or light-shaft. (b) In a ship: (1) A compartment formed by bulkheads round the pumps, for their protection and for ease of access to them. (2) A shaft through which to raise and lower an auxiliary screw-propeller. (3) The cockpit. (c) In a fishing-vessel or on a float, a compartment with a perforated bottom for the admission of water, in which fish are kept alive: distinctively called live-well. (d) In a military mine, a shaft with branches or galleries running out from it. (e) In a furnace, the lower part of the cavity into which the metal falls. (f) In an Irish jaunting-car, the hollow space for luggage between the seats. (g) In some breech-loading small arms, a cavity for the breech-block in the rear of the chamber. (h) In an English court of law, the inclosed space for the lawyers and their assistants, immediately in front of the judges' bench.

Solicitors . . . ranged in a line, in a long matted well,
. . . between the registrar's red table and the silk gowns.
Dickens, Bleak House, i.

6. In her., a bearing representing a well-curb, usually seen in perspective, circular, and masoned of large stones.—7. A whirlpool; an eddy; especially, a dangerous eddy in the sea, as about the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

The wells of Tuffiloe can wheel the stoutest vessel round and round, in despite of either sail or storage.
Scott, Pirate, xxxviii.

O to us,
The fools of habit, sweeter seems
To rest beneath the clover sod . . .
Than if with thee [a ship] the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, x.

Absorbing-well. See absorb.—Artesian well. See Artesian (with cut).—Driven well, or drive-well. See tube-well.—Flowing well. See flowing.—Negative well. Same as absorbing-well.—The wells, or Wells, in England, wells or springs of mineral waters, or a place where such wells are situated: as, to drink of or go to the wells at Bath; Tunbridge Wells.

The New Wells at Epsom, with variety of Raffle Shops, will be open'd on Easter Monday next.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [II. 118.]

= Syn. 4. Well, Spring, Fountain, Cistern. A well is an artificial pit sunk to such a depth that water comes into the bottom and rises to the water-level, ready to be drawn up. A spring is a place where water comes naturally to the surface of the ground and flows away: a spring may be opened or struck in excavation, but cannot be made. A fountain is characterized by the leaping upward of the water: it may be natural, and thus be a kind of spring, or it may be artificial, as in a public square. A cistern is an artificial receptacle for the storage of water, as that which is conducted from roofs; figuratively, the word may be applied to similar natural subterranean reservoirs.

well² (wel), adv. compar. better, superl. best. [Also *E. dial. wall; Sc. well, weil; < ME. wel, weel, wal, wol, welle, vele, sometimes wela, < AS. wel, well = OS. wel = OFries. rel, wal, wol = D. wel = MLG. wol, wal, wole, LG. wol = OHG. wela, wola, MHG. wol, G. wohl, wol = Icel. rel (sometimes val) = Sw. väl = Dan. rel = Goth. waila, well; orig. 'as wished,' 'as desired,' from the root of will; cf. Gr. βίλλω, better, Skt. vara, better, vara, a wish, Skt. √ var, choose: see will.] Well has come to be used as the adverb of good.] 1. Welwitschia (wel-wich'i-ſ), n. [NL. (J. D. Hooker, 1863), named after Friedrich Welwitsch (1806-72), an Austrian botanist and traveler.] A genus of gymnospermous plants, of the order Gnetaceae, among the most remarkable in the vegetable kingdom, distinguished by diceious many-flowered imbricated cone-like spikes panicle at the margin of a short woody trunk. The only species, W. mirabilis, is a native of sandy regions of southwestern tropical Africa, in Benguela and Damara-land, between 14° and 23° south latitude.

Welwitschia mirabilis.

1. Entire plant. 2. Branch of the panicle. 3. Stamens—tube laid open, showing the inclosed ovule. 4. Pollen-grains. 5. Scale of cone with flower-bud. 6. Seed, longitudinal section, showing the calyptriform integument at its apex. 7. Ripe seed and base of pericarp. 8. Embryo with styliform apex of the integument of the seed. 9. Embryo.

Its thick trunk bears but two leaves. The original cotyledons, which are opposite, green, spreading, and persistent, are composed of a hard fibrous substance, and become often 6 feet long and 2 or 3 wide. They finally split into long shreds, but are still retained, it is said, through over a hundred years of growth. The mature trunk forms a tabular mass only about a foot high, but 5 or 6 feet across; the top is truncate, hard, pitted, and broken by cracks, and resembles a fungus of the genus Polyporus; the base is deeply sunk in the soil, and produces middle-sized roots. The panicle inflorescence is composed of rigid erect dichotomously jointed stems from 6 to 12 inches high, with two opposite scales sheathing each joint, and is developed annually from the upper side of the trunk at the base of the cotyledons. The flower-spikes are composed of brilliant scarlet scales overlapping, usually in four rows—the male with spikes 1½ inches long or under, the female larger, fewer, and thicker. Each scale contains a flower, the male a small loose membranous perianth, the filaments connate into a loosely exerted tube, and six anthers, each opening by three apical and finally confluent pores. The fruit is dry, two-winged, compressed, inclosed in a fibrous utricle. The new growth is chiefly horizontal, enlarging the stem both above and below the base of the leaf, which finally projects from a deep marginal cavity.

welyt, a. [ME., < AS. welig, welg (= OHG. welagi), rich, wealthy, < wela, weal: see weal.] In a state of weal or good health; healthy.

Wernerian (wér-né'-ri-an), a. and n. [< Werner (see def.) + -i-an.] 1. a. Pertaining of or in conformity with the views of Abraham Gottlob Werner (1750-1817), a German geologist, professor in the mining-school of Freiberg, Saxony, who had much influence on the development of geology at the time when this branch of science began to be seriously studied. He was the principal expounder of the so-called Neptunian theory of the earth's formation, according to which the earth was originally covered by a chaotic ocean which held the materials of all the rocks in solution, and from which ocean the various formations were precipitated one after another.

The Wernerian notion of the aqueous precipitation of "Trap" has since that date never held up its head.

G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central France, Pref., p. ix.

II. n. In geol., an advocate of the Wernerian theory.

My two friends agreed with me in the opinion that the error of the Wernerians in undervaluing, or rather despising altogether as of no appreciable value, the influence of volcanic forces in the production of the rocks that compose the surface of the globe formed a fatal bar to the progress of sound geological science which it was above all things desirable to remove.

G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central France, Pref., p. vi.

Neptune had failed to extinguish the torch of Pluto, and the Wernerians were retreating before the Huttonians.
Nature, XLII. 218.

A love-lorn swain, . . . full of imaginary sorrows and Wertherian grief. Trollope, Barchester Towers. (Hoppe.)

Wertherism (ver-tér'-izm), n. [< Werther (see Wertherian) + -ism.] Wertherian sentiment.

The romance of Jacobinism which thrilled in Shelley, the romance of Wertherism which glowed with sullen fire in Byron, are extinct as poetic impulses.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 468.

wervelt, n. pl. An obsolete form of varvels.

werwolf, werewolf (wér'-, wér'-wulf), n.; pl. wervolves, werewolves (-wulfz). [Also wehrwolf and formerly warwolf; prop. werwolf, < ME. werwolf (pl. wervolves), < AS. werwulf, also erroneously werewulf, a werwolf (also used as an epithet of the devil) (= MD. weerwolf, waerwolf, weyrwolf, wederwolf, D. waarwolf = MLG. werwulf, werwolf, werwulf = MHG. werwolf, G. werwolf, also erroneously währwolf = Sw. varulf = Dan. varule, werwolf; cf. OF. wareul, garoul, F. garou (in comp. loup-garou, dial. gairou, varou, etc., ML. gerulphus, garulphus, < Teut.), lit. 'man-wolf' (tr. Gr. λύκάνθρωπος, > ML. lycanthropus, > E. lycanthrope), < wer, man, + wulf, wolf: see *wer*¹ and wolf.] In old superstition, a human being turned into a wolf while retaining human intelligence. This transformation was either voluntarily assumed, through infernal aid, for the gratification of cannibalism or other beastly propensities, or inflicted by means of witchcraft; and it might be made and unmade at its subject's will in the former case, or be either temporary or permanent in the latter. A voluntary werwolf was the most dangerous of all creatures, and trials of men on charge of crimes committed while in this form took place in Europe as late as the seventeenth century. But an involuntary werwolf might retain humane feelings and sympathies, and act beneficently as the protector of persons in distress or otherwise; and many medieval legends are based upon this idea. The former belief in werwolves throughout Europe (not yet entirely extinct in regions where wolves still abound) has given the general name lycanthropy to belief in the metamorphosis of men into beasts of any kind (generally the most destructive or obnoxious of the locality), prevalent among nearly all savage and semi-civilized peoples.

Sir Marrooke, the good knight that was betrayed by his wife, for shee made him well a seven years a werwolf.
Sir T. Malory, Mort d'Arthur, III. cxxxix.

About the field religiously they went,
With hollowing charms the werwolf thence to fray,
That them and theirs awaited to betray.
Drayton, Man in the Moon

In the old doctrine of Werewolves, not yet extinct in Europe, men who are versipelles or turnskins have the actual faculty of jumping out of their skins, to become for a time wolves.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 7

werwolfish, werewolfish (wér'-, wér'-wulf'ish), a. [< werwolf + -ish¹.] Like a werwolf; lycanthropic; having or exhibiting the appearance or propensities attributed to werwolves.

werwolfism, werewolfism (wér'-, wér'-wulf'izm), n. [< werwolf + -ism.] Lycanthropy also, the body of tradition and belief on this subject.

English folk-lore is singularly barren of werewolf stories. . . . The traditional belief in were-wolfism must however, have remained long in the popular mind, . . . for the word occurs in old ballads and romances.
S. Baring-Gould, Book of Were-Wolves, vii

Westphal balance. A form of balance used in determining the specific gravity of solutions and also of mineral fragments. In the case of fragments a "heavy solution" is first obtained, in which they just float. The balance consists of a bar supported on a fulcrum near the middle, and having one half of it, from whose extremity hangs a sinker, graduated into ten parts. The sinker is immersed in the liquid under experiment, and then riders are hung at suitable points on the bar until it is brought back into a horizontal position as indicated by the fixed scale at the other end. The position and size of the riders give the means of reading off at once the required specific gravity without calculation.

Westphal-Erb symptom. Same as Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

Westphalian (west-fā'li-an), a. and n. [ME. Westphalia (see def.) + -an.] I. a: Of or pertaining to Westphalia, a province of Prussia, bordering on Hanover, the Rhenish Province, the Netherlands, etc. Westphalia was formerly a duchy, and (with larger territory) a Napoleonic kingdom from 1807 to 1813.

The Westphalian treaties, which terminated the thirty years' war, were finally signed on Oct. 24, 1648.

Amer. Cyc., XVI. 570.

Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

westre, v. i. An old form of wester.

Westringia (wes'trin'ji-ā), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1798), named after J. P. Westring, a physician of Linköping, Sweden, who died in 1833.]

A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Labiata and tribe Prostantherae. It is characterized by a calyx with five equal teeth, a corolla with the upper lip flatish, and anther-connectives without an appendage. There are 9 or 11 species, all natives of extra-tropical Australia. They are shrubs with small entire leaves in whorls of three or four together, and sessile or short-pedicelled twin flowers scattered in the axils of the leaves, or rarely crowded in leafy terminal heads. W. romarinifolia, the Victorian rosemary, an evergreen shrub growing about 8 feet high, is sometimes cultivated.

West-Virginian (west-vēr-jin'jī-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to West Virginia, one of the United States, set apart from Virginia during the civil war, and admitted to the Union in 1863.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of West Virginia.

westward (wes't-wārd), adv. [ME. westward; < AS. westweard, westweard, westward, < west, west, + -weard, E. -ward.] 1. Toward the west; in a westerly direction: as, to ride or sail westward.

Westward the course of empire takes its way.

Ep. Berkeley, Arts and Learning in America

2. Toward the ecclesiastical west. See west.

Mass is celebrated by the priest standing behind the altar with his face westward.

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 106.

Westward ho! to the west: an old cry of London watermen on the Thames in hailing passengers bound westward, taken as the title of a play by Dekker and Webster and of a novel by Charles Kingsley.

*Oh, There lies your way, due west.
Vio. Then westward-ho!*

Shak., T. N., III. 1. 140.

westward (west'wärd), a. [< westward, adv.] Being toward the west; bearing or tending westward: as, a westward position or course; the westward trend of the mountains.

westwardly (west'wärd-li), a. [< westward + -ly.] Bearing toward or from the west; west-erly. [Rare.]

On the 19th, the [ice]-pack was driven in by a westwardly wind, and . . . this open space was closed.

C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 259.

westwardly (west'wärd-li), adv. [< westward-ly, a.] In a direction bearing toward the west: as, to pass westwardly.

westwards (west'wärdz), adv. [< ME. "westwardes" (= D. westwaerts = G. westwärts); as westward + adv. gen. -s.] Same as westward.

westy¹, a. [ME., also westig, < AS. wēstig, desert, < wēste, a desert, waste: see waste.] Waste; desert. Layamon, l. 1120.

westy² (wes'ti), a. Dizzy; giddy. Ray; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Whiles he lies wallowing with a westy head,
And palish carcass, on his brothel bed.

Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. l. 158.

wet¹ (wet), a. [E. dial. and Sc. also wet and wat; < ME. wet, wet, wat, < AS. wāt = OFries. wēt, wēt = Icel. vatr = Sw. vāt = Dan. vaad, wet, moist; akin to AS. wæter, etc., water, and to Goth. wato, etc., water: see water.] 1. Covered with or permeated by a moist or fluid substance; charged with moisture: as, a wet sponge; wet land; wet cheeks; a wet painting (one on which the paint is still semi-fluid).

Ziff the Erthe were made moyst and wet with that Watre, it wolde nevere bere Fruyt.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 100.

I, forced to go to the office on foot, was almost wet to the skin, and spoiled my silk breeches almost.

Peppys, Diary, II. 298.

In the greenest growth of the Maytime,
I rode where the woods were wet.

Swinburne, An Interlude.

2. Filled with or containing a supply of water: as, a wet dock; a wet meter. See phrases below.—3. Consisting of water or other liquid; of a watery nature.

Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not.

Shak., Lear, IV. 7. 71.

4. Characterized by rain; rainy; drizzly; showery: as, wet weather; a wet season (used especially with reference to tropical or semitropical countries, in which the year is divided into wet and dry seasons).

Wet October's torrent flood. Milton, Comus, l. 930.

As to the Seasons of the Year, I cannot distinguish them there [in the torrid zone] no other way than by Wet and Dry.

Dampier, Voyages, II. III. 2.

5. Drenched or drunk with liquor; tipsy. [Colloq.]

When my lost Lover the tall Ship ascends,
With Music gay, and wet with Jovial Friends.

Prior, Celia to Damon.

6. In U. S. polit. slang, opposed to prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors: as, a wet town. Compare dry, 13.—A wet blanket. See blanket.—A wet boat, a boat that is crank and ships water readily.

"Why don't you go forward, sir? . . . she is sure to wet us abaft." . . . "Thank you, but . . . (with an heroic attempt at sea-slang) I like a wet boat."

C. Reade, Love me Little, xvii.

A wet day. Same as a rainy day (which see, under rainy). Ergo, saith the miser, "part with nothing, but keep all against a wet day."

Fuller, General Worthless, xi. (Davies.)

Wet bargain. Same as Dutch bargain (which see, under bargain).—Wet bob, a boy who goes in for bouting in preference to cricket, foot-ball, or other land-sports. [Eton College slang.]

Everything is enjoyable at Eton in the summer half. The wet-bobs on the river, in all their many trials of strength, . . . and the "dry-bobs" in the playing-fields, with all the excitement of their countless matches.

C. E. Pascoe, Every-day Life in Our Public Schools, p. 62.

Wet brain, a dropsical condition of the brain and its membranes, sometimes observed in post-mortem examinations of those who have died of delirium tremens.—Wet-bulb thermometer. See psychrometer (with out).—Wet cooper. See cooper.—Wet dock, a dock or basin at a seaport furnished with gates for shutting in the tidal water, so as to float vessels berthed in it at a proper level for loading and unloading.—Wet goods, liquors:

so called in humorous allusion to dry goods. [Slang, U. S.]

—Wet meter, a gas-meter in which the gas to be measured passes through a body of water. The wet meter regulates the flow of gas more steadily than the dry meter, but is more difficult to keep in order.—Wet plate, in photog., a plate coated with collodion and sensitized with a salt (usually the nitrate) of silver: so called because it is necessary, in this process, to perform all the operations of making the picture, and to including the final fixing of the plate, before the coating of collodion dries. For some thirty years, from about 1850, this was by far the most important photographic process in use, but it is now almost wholly superseded by the various rapid dry-plate processes. The phrase is also used attributively to note the process or anything connected with it. See collodion process, under collodion.—Wet port, a seaport as a place of entry for foreign goods, in distinction from a dry port, or land-port, a place of entry for goods transported by land. Encyc. Brit., VI. 729.—Wet preparation, a specimen of natural history immersed in alcohol or other preservative fluid.—Wet provisions, a class of provisions furnished to a ship, including salt beef and pork, vinegar, molasses, pickles, etc.—Wet puddling. See puddling. 2.—Wet Quaker, a Quaker who does not strictly observe the rules of his society.

Socinians and Presbyterians,

Quakers, and Wet-Quakers, or Merry-ones.

T. Ward, England's Reformation, I. 213.

Wet Quakerism. See Quakerism.—Wet steam. See steam and open, 13.—Wet way, in chem., the method of qualitative and quantitative analysis and assay in which the substance to be examined is first dissolved in some liquid and then treated with liquid reagents: the opposite of fire-assay, or treatment in the dry way. In the ordinary analysis of minerals, the substance is first finely pulverized and then dissolved in an acid, after which further treatment follows. If insoluble in an acid, it is fused with potassium or sodium carbonate, after which treatment the fused mass is soluble, either wholly or in part, the silica (if the mineral is a silicate) separating out and being removed by filtering, after which the process is continued the same way as when the substance is soluble without the necessity of a preliminary attack by an alkali at a high temperature. Ordinary analyses of minerals are made in the wet way, assays of ores not infrequently in the dry way.—With a wet finger, with little effort or trouble; very easily or readily: probably from the practice of wetting the finger to facilitate matters, as in turning over a leaf of a book, or rubbing out writing on a slate.

Walk you here; I'll beckon; you shall see

I'll fetch her with a wet finger.

Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, II. 2.

wet¹ (wet), n. [*E. dial. and Sc. also wet and wat; < ME. wet, wete, wæte, wate, < AS. wēta, m., wēte, f. (= Icel. Sw. wēta = Dan. væde), wet, moisture, < wēt, wet: see wet*¹, a.] 1. That which makes wet, as water and other liquids; moisture; specifically, rain.

I se wel how ye swete;

Have heer a cloth and wype away the wete.

Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 176.

Upon whose [a river's] weeping margent she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet.

Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 40.

Aft ha'e I run your errands, lady,
When blawin bath wind and wet.

Lady Mairry (Child's Ballads, II. 88).

The gable-end of the cottage was stained with wet.

T. Hardy, Three Strangers.

2. The act of wetting; specifically, a wetting of the throat with drink; a drink or dram of liquor; indulgence in drinking. [Slang.]

No bargain could be completed without a wet, and no friendship or enmity forgotten without recourse to the bottle.

A. C. Grant, Bush-Life in Queensland, I. 30.

3. In U. S. polit. slang, an opponent of prohibition; one who favors the traffic in liquor.—Heavy wet. See *heavy*¹.

wet¹ (wet), v. t.; pret. and pp. wetted or wet, ppr. wetting. [*< ME. weten, wēten (pret. wette, wætte, pp. wet), < AS. wētan, wētan, ge-wētan (= Icel. Sw. wēta = Dan. væde), wet, moisten, < wēt, wet: see wet*¹, a.] 1. To make wet; moisten, drench, or soak with water or other fluid; dip or soak in a liquid.

Ne wette hir fingers in hir sauce depe.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 129.

2. To moisten with drink; hence, figuratively, to inaugurate or celebrate by a drink or a treat of liquor: as, to wet a new hat. [Slang.]

Down came all the company together, and away! the ale-house was immediately filled with clamour, and scoring one mug to the Marquis of such a place, oil and vinegar to such an Earl, three quarts to my new Lord for wetting his title.

Steele, Spectator, No. 88.

Then we should have commissions to wet.

C. Shadwell, Humours of the Navy, II. 3.

To wet down paper, in printing, to dip paper in water, or sprinkle it in small portions, which are laid together and left under pressure for a time to allow the moisture to spread equally through the mass. The dampness of the paper fits it for taking the ink readily and evenly in the process of printing, and prevents it from sticking to the type. The finest printing, however, is done with dry paper, and ink of a suitable quality for such use.—To wet one's line. See *line*².

I have not yet wetted my line since we met together.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 84.

To wet one's whistle. See whistle.—Wetting-out steep. Same as rot's steep (which see, under steep).—Wetting the block, among English shoemakers, the act of celebrating by a convivial supper, on the 3d Monday in March, the cessation of work by candle-light Hallowe'en.

wet-cup (wet'kup), n. A cupping-glass whe used in the operation of wet-cupping. Sometimes it is specially constructed with a lance or scarificator, which can be used to incise the skin after the oil has been applied.

wet-cupping (wet'kup'ing), n. The application of a cupping-glass simultaneously with incision of the skin, by means of which a small quantity of blood is withdrawn. See cupping, 1.

wether (weθ'ēr), n. [E. dial. also wedder < ME. wether, weθir, wedyr, < AS. wīther, wether, a castrated ram, = OS. wīthar, wīthe = D. wedder, weder = OHG. wīdar, MHG. wīder. G. wīdder = Icel. vethr = Sw. vādur = Dan. væder, vædder, a ram, = Goth. wīthrus, a lamb akin to L. vitulus, a calf, Skt. vatsa, calf, young lit. 'a yearling,' connected with Skt. vatsar, and Gr. έτος, a year, L. vetus, aged, old: see veal and veteran.] A castrated ram.

And softer than the wolle is of a wether.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 63.

wether-hog (weθ'ēr-hog), n. A young wether [Prov. Eng.] wethewynd, n. A Middle English form of withwind.

wetly (wet'li), adv. [*< wet*¹ + *-ly*².] In a wet state or condition; moistly.

"Love," she says, very sweetly, while, for the last time her blue eyes wetly dwell on him.

Rhoda Broughton, Joan, II. 11.

wetness (wet'nes), n. The state or condition of being wet; also, the capacity for communicating moisture or making wet: as, the wetness of the atmosphere or of steam.

The wetness of the working fluid [steam] to which the action of the walls of the cylinder gives rise is essentially superficial.

Encyc. Brit., XXII. 488.

wet-nurse (wet'nērs), n. A woman employed to suckle the infant of another. Compare dry-nurse.

wet-nurse (wet'nērs), v. t. [< wet-nurse, n.] 1. To act as a wet-nurse to; suckle.

Or is he a mythus—ancient word for "humbug"—Such as Livy told about the wolf that wet-nursed Romulus and Remus? O. W. Holmes, Professor, l.

Hence—2. To coddle as a wet-nurse does; treat with the tenderness shown to an infant.

The system of wetnursing adopted by the Post Office authorities in the case of the telegraph service has not been one of uniform success. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXVII. 206.

wet-pack (wet'pak), n. A means of reducing the temperature in fever by wrapping the body in cloths wet with cold water, and covering these with a blanket or other dry material.

wet-press (wet'pres), n. In paper-making, the second press in which wet hand-made paper is compacted and partially dried. E. H. Knight.

wet-salter (wet'sāl'tēr), n. A salter who prepares or deals in wet provisions. See wet provisions, under *wet*¹. Compare dry-salter.

The Parade . . . smelt as strong about Breakfast Times as a Wet Salter's Shop at Midsommer.

Tom Brown, Works (ed. 1708), III. 86.

wet-shod (wet'shod), a. [*< ME. wet-shod, wat-shod, wete-shodde; < wet*¹ + *shod*¹.] Wet as regards the shoes; wearing wet shoes.

There [in the battle] men were wetshodde

Alle of Brayn & of blode.

Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 690.

Unless to shame his Court Flatterers who would not else be convinc'd, Canute need not to have gone wet-shod home.

Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

So he went over at last, not much about wet-shod.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, II.

wetter (wet'ēr), n. One who wets, or practises wetting, for some purpose; specifically, in printing, a workman who wets down paper. See phrase under *wet*¹, v. t.

wetter-off (wet'ēr-ōf'), n. In glass-making, a workman who detaches formed bottles from the blowing-iron by applying a moistened tool to the neck.

wetting-machine (wet'ing-ma-shén'), n. A mechanism that dampens paper and makes it suitable for printing. It is made in many forms, the simplest of which is a flexible and vibrating rose-noodle attached by a pipe to a water-tank. Paper for web-presses is usually dampened by a spray of water from a perforated pipe as the paper is automatically unwound.

wetish (wet'ish), a. [wet + -ish.] Somewhat wet; moist; humid.

we-uns. See under we.

weve¹, v. An old spelling of weave¹.

weve², v. t. A Middle English form of waive.

wev¹, v. See weave².

wev², n. An obsolete spelling of weevil.

wex¹, v. An obsolete form of wax¹.

wey¹ (wā), n. [ME. weie, waie, weie, wæge, AS. wæg (= OHG. wāga = Ice. vág), a weight, weagan, raise, lift; see weigh¹, n., and cf. weight¹.]

1. A unit of weight, 14 stone according to the old statute de ponderibus. But a wey of wool is 64 tods, or 13 stone; locally, 30, 30½, or 31 pounds. A wey of hemp was 30 pounds in Somersetshire, 32 pounds in Dorsetshire, being 8 heads of 4 pounds, twisted and tied. A statute of 1430 declares that cheese shall not be weighed by the ounce, but by the wey of 32 cloves, each clove of 7 pounds, except in Essex, where it is 256 pounds, or 32 cloves of 7½ pounds. But locally it was 8 hundredweight, or 416 pounds.

Hence—2. A unit of measure, properly 40 bushels. So a statute of George III. makes a wey of salt one ton, which is 40 bushels. But another statute of the same monarch makes a wey of meal 48 bushels of 84 pounds each; and in Devonshire a wey of lime coals, or culm was sometimes 48 double Winchester bushels. So in South Wales a wey of coals is 6, not 5, chaldrons.

3. An amount of window-glass—60 cases.

[Eng. in all uses.]

wey², weyet, v. Obsolete spellings of weigh¹.

wey³, n. An obsolete form of way¹.

weyet, n. An obsolete spelling of weigher.

Weymouth pine. See pinet.

weyvet, v. An old spelling of waive.

wezand¹, n. An obsolete spelling of weasand.

w. f. In printing, an abbreviation of wrong font: a mark on the margin of a proof, calling attention to the fact that the letter or letters, etc., opposite differ from the rest in size or face.

W. G. An abbreviation of Worthy Grand, prefixed to various titles of office among Freemasons and similar orders: as, W. G. C. (Worthy Grand Chaplain or Conductor).

wh. See W, 1.

wha (hwā), pron. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of who.

whaap, n. See whaup.

whack (hwak), v. [A var. of thuck², appar. suggested by whap, whop, whip, etc., the form thuck being intermediate between thuck² and whack.] 1. trans. To give a heavy or resounding blow to; thwack [Colloq.]

A traveller, coming up, finds the missing man by whacking each of them over the shoulder.

W. A. Clouston, Book of Noodles, II.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 152.

II. intrans. 1. To strike, or continue striking, anything with smart blows. [Colloq.]—

2. To make a division or settlement; square accounts; pay: often in the phrase to whack up. [Slang.]

The city has never whacked up with the gas company. Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XIII. 9.

At last Long J.—and I got to quarrel about the whacking; there was cheating a goin' on.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 172.

whack (hwak), n. [whack, v.] 1. A heavy blow; a thwack.

Sometimes a chap will give me a lick with a stick just as I'm going over; sometimes a reg'lar good hard whack. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 564.

2. A stroke; a trial or attempt: as, to take a whack at a job. [Slang.]—3. A piece; a share; a portion. [Slang.]

This gay young bachelor had taken his share (what he called "his whack") of pleasure.

Thackeray, Shabby Genteel Story, v.

My word! he did more than his whack;

He was never a cove as would shirk.

G. Walsh, A Little Tin Plate (A Century of Australian Song, p. 500).

4. Appetite. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

whacker (hwak'er), n. [whack + -er.] Something strikingly large of its kind; a big thing; a whopper. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. vii. [Slang.]

whacking (hwak'ing), a. [Ppr. of whack, v.; cf. whopping, etc.] Very large; lusty; whopping: as, a whacking fish or falsehood. Often used adverbially: as, a whacking big fish. [Colloq.]

whahoo (hwā-hō'), n. Same as wahoo, but applied specifically to the winged elm.

whaint¹, whaintset. Middle English forms of quaint, quaintise.

whaisle, whaisle (hwā'zē), v. i. [A dial. freq. of wheeze.] To breathe hard, as in asthma; wheeze. [Scotch.]

But sax Scotch miles thou try't their mettle,

An' gart them whaisle.

Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

whake, whaker. Dialectal forms of quake, quaker.

whale¹ (hwāl), n. [ME. hwal, wal, qual, qual, AS. hwal (pl. hwalas) = MD. wal = Ice. hvalr = Sw. Dan. hval, a whale, including any large fish or cetacean; also in comp. D. walvisch = OHG. walfisc, MHG. wal-visch, G. walfisch = Ice. hvalfiskr = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk, a whale (see whale-fish); cf. OHG. walarā, MHG. walre, a whale; cf. also MHG. G. wels, shad. Hence ult. in comp. E. walrus, narwhal, horsewhale; ulterior origin unknown. Skeat connects whale¹, as lit. 'the roller,' with wheel¹; others connect it with L. balena, a whale. Both derivations are untenable.] Any member of the mammalian order Cetacea or Cete (which see); an ordinary cetacean, as distinguished from a sirenian, or so-called herbivorous cetacean; a marine mammal of fish-like form and habit, with fore limbs in the form of fin-like flippers, without external trace of hind limbs, and with a naked body tapering to a tail with flukes which are like a fish's caudal fin, but are horizontal instead of vertical; especially, a cetacean of large to the largest size, the small ones being distinctively named dolphins, porpoises, etc.: in popular use applied to any large marine animal. (a) Whale is not less strictly applicable than universally applied to the toothless or whalebone whales, all of which are of great size, and some of which are by far the largest of animals. They consist of the right whales, finner-whales, and humpbacks, composing the family Baleenidae alone, and represent five well-marked genera, namely: (1) Balea proper, the right whales, without any dorsal fin and with smooth throat; (2) Neobalea, based on N. marginata, a whalebone whale said to combine a smooth throat with presence of a dorsal fin; (3) Rachianectes, with one species, R. glaucus, the gray whale; (4) Megaptera, the hump-backed whales, with a dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and long flippers, of several nominal species of all seas; and (5) Balenoptera, the true finners, or rorquals, with dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and short flippers: it comprises at least four, and probably more, species. Various other genera have been named (as Agaphetus for certain so-called scrag-whales), and the generic synonyms of these whales are probably more numerous than the actual species. (b) ordinal group—from 4 to about 80 feet in linear dimension. The size of the larger whales has been grossly exaggerated in many of the accounts which find popular credence. Adult right whales of different species range from 20 to 50 feet in length, only the polar whale attaining the latter dimension; the common humpback is from 40 to 50 feet long; the sperm-whale reaches 80 feet; and the rorquals of several species range from 40 to 80 feet, the maximum length being reached only by the blue rorqual, which is the largest of known animals.—Arctic whale, the polar whale, Balea mysticetus; that right whale which is of circumpolar distribution, as distinguished from any such whale of temperate North Atlantic or North Pacific waters, or from which the latter are sought to be distinguished, as the Atlantic, Pacific, northwest, or Biscay whale.—Atlantic whale, the right whale of temperate North Atlantic waters. It is not distinct from the southern right whale, Balea australis, though so named, as B. clausenae, and as B. biscoyensis, the Biscay whale.—Australian whale, as the New Zealand whale.—Baleen whale, any whalebone whale, as a right whale. See cuts under Baleenidae and whalebone.—Biscay whale, Balea biscoyensis, long the object of a special fishery by the Basques, conducted as early as the tenth century.—Black whale. See cut under orqual. — Fin-whale or finner-whale, a finback whale; any whalebone whale with a dorsal fin, as a humpback or orqual; a furrowed whale. See Balenoptera, Megaptera, and cut under orqual. — Furrowed whale, a whalebone whale with the skin of the throat plicated, or thrown into ridges and furrows, and a dorsal fin; distinguished from smooth whale. The humpbacks and the finners or orquals are furrowed whales. See Balenopteridae. — Giant sperm-whale, the sperm-whale proper. See cut under sperm-whale. — Gray whale, the (California) whale, Rachianectes glaucus, a large finner-whale or orqual of the Pacific coast of North America. It has many local names, as devil-fish, grayback, hardhead, musel-digger, ripsack, etc. See Rachianectes. — Great polar whale, the polar or Greenland right whale. — Greenland whale, the right whale of the North Atlantic; the great polar whale, Balaena mysticetus. — Humpbacked whale. See humpback and Humpbacked Whale (Megaptera boops).

Megaptera. — Japan or Japanese whale, Balaena japonica, a right whale of the North Pacific. — Killer-whale. See killer, 3, and Orca. — Loose whale, a whale that has not been struck by the toggle-iron, or a whale that has been fastened to, but has made its escape. — Mysticete whales, the toothless or baleen whales; whalebone whales. See Mysticete, Megapterinae, Balenidae. — New Zealand whale, Neobalaena marginata, a whalebone whale of Polynesian and Australian waters, not yet well known, having the smooth throat of the right whales, a dorsal fin, very long and slender white baleen, small flippers with only four digits, and various osteological peculiarities. It is of smallest size among the baleen whales, being only about 20 feet long. — Northwest whale, the right whale of the northwestern coast of North America, Balaena sieboldi, as distinguished from the southern right whale. Also called Pacific right whale. — Pilot-whale. Same as calling-whale. — Polar whale, the right whale of the Arctic Atlantic waters, or Greenland whale, Balaena mysticetus, more fully called great polar whale, and by many local names, as bow-head, steep-top, ice-breaker, ice-whale, etc. — Pygmy sperm-whale, a toothed whale of the genus Kogia; a porpoise sperm-whale (which see, under sperm-whale). — Right whale, a whalebone whale of the restricted genus Balaena: so called, it is said, because this is the "right" kind of whale to take. Right whales inhabit all known seas, and those of the main divisions of the waters of the globe have been specified by name, as the Arctic, polar, or Greenland right whale, the Atlantic, the Pacific, the southern, the north-west, etc. These have received several technical names, as B. mysticetus of the Arctic ocean, B. bisayensis or circarctica of the North Atlantic, B. australis of the South Atlantic, B. japonica of the North Pacific, B. antipodarum of the South Pacific, and others. It is not likely that more than two valid species are represented in this synonymy: (a) B. mysticetus is of circumpolar distribution in the northern hemisphere. It attains a length of from 40 to 50 feet, has no dorsal fin, flippers of medium size, and very long narrow flukes, tapering to a point and somewhat falcate. The greatest girth is about the middle, whence the body tapers rapidly to the comparatively slender root of the tail. The throat is smooth; the head is of great size; and the eye is situated very low down and far back, between the base of the flipper and the corner of the mouth. The profile of the mouth is strongly arched, and its capacity is enormous, exceeding that of the thorax and abdomen together. This cavern is fringed on each side with baleen hanging from the upper jaw; the plates are 350 to 400 on each side, the longest attaining a length of 10 or 12 feet; they are black in color, and finely frayed out along the inner edge into a fringe of long elastic filaments. When the jaws are closed, the baleen serves as a sieve to strain out the multitudes of small mollusks or crustaceans upon which the whale feeds, and which are gulped in with many barrels of water in the act of grazing the surface with open mouth. About 300 of the slabs on each side are merchantable, representing 15 hundredweight of bone from a whale of average size, which yields also 15 tons of oil; but some large individuals render nearly twice as much of both these products. (b) The southern right whale, B. australis, differs from the polar whale in its proportionately shorter and smaller head, greater convexity of the arch of the mouth, shorter baleen, and more numerous vertebrae. It inhabits both Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in temperate latitudes, and in the former waters was the object of a fishery during the middle ages for the European supply of oil and bone. This industry gave way to the pursuit of the polar whale about the beginning of the seventeenth century. This whale has long been rare in the North Atlantic, but has occasionally stranded on the European coast, and more frequently on that of the United States. A similar if not identical right whale is hunted in temperate North Pacific waters. Right whales are rare and not pursued in tropical seas, but are objects of the chase in various parts of the south temperate ocean. See cuts above, and under Balenidae. — Rudolphi's whale, the small finner-whale or orqual, Balenoptera borealis. See orqual. — Siebold's whale, a very large finner-whale, the blue orqual, Balenoptera sieboldi, one of the two or three largest of all animals. See orqual. — Siebold's whale, a right whale of the North Pacific, nominally Balaena sieboldi. See northwest whale, above. — Smooth whale, a whalebone whale having no plications of the skin of the throat and no dorsal fin, as a right whale; distinguished from furrowed whale. See Balenidae. — Southern right whale, Balaena australis of the South Atlantic, admitted as a distinct species from the polar right whale. See Atlantic whale, above. — South Pacific whale, a southern right whale, Balaena antipodarum. — Sowerby's whale, a ziphioid whale, Mesoplodon sowerbii, of the Atlantic. — Spermaceti whale, the sperm-whale. — Sulphur whale, Sulphur-bottomed whale. Same as sulphur-bottom. — To bone a whale, to strike a bone, as the shoulder-blade, in lancing a whale. — Toothed whale, a whale or other cetacean with true teeth in one or both jaws; any member of the division Denticete or Odontoceti; distinguished from whalebone whale. — To throw a tub to a whale. See tub. — Very like a whale, an expression of ironical assent to an assertion or a proposition regarded as preposterous: from the use of the phrase by Polonius in humoring Hamlet's supposed madness:

Ham. Methinks it [a cloud] is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 399.

Whalebone whale, a baleen whale; a toothless whale whose mouth contains whalebone; any member of the Balenidae, as a right whale, humpback, or orqual, whether furrowed or smooth. — Whale of passage, a migratory whale, or a whale during its migration. — Whale's bone, ivory: perhaps because supposed to come from the bones of the whale, at a time when the real source of the material was little known, or when most of the ivory used in western Europe consisted of the teeth of the walrus, confounded with the whale, and possibly those of the sperm-whale, which, though of comparatively small size, are of fine quality. The term was in common use for several centuries.

Her hands so white as whales bone,

Her finger tip with Cassidone.

Puttenham, Partheniades, vii.

This is the flower that smiles on every one,

To show his teeth as white as whale's bone.

Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 332.

White whale, a whale of the family Delphinidae and genus Delphinapterus, as D. leucas; a beluga. The species named inhabits Arctic and subarctic waters, and is prized for its fine oil and valuable skin. The latter makes a kind of leather used for mast-bays and some military accoutrements. Also called whitefish. See cut under Delphinapterus. — Ziphioid whales. See Hyperoodon, Ziphius, Ziphiinae. (See also calling-whale, ice-whale, scrap-whale, sperm-whale.)

whale¹ (hwāl' bāk), v. i.; pret. and pp. whaled, ppr. whaling. [whale¹, n.] To take whales; pursue the business of whale-fishing.

Cruising and whaling in the bays is full of excitement and anxiety. C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 63.

whale² (hwāl', r. t.; pret. and pp. whaled, ppr. whaling. [A var. of whale¹, the change of initial w to wh being perhaps due to association with whack, whap, whip, etc.] To lash with vigorous stripes; thrash or beat soundly. [Colloq.]

I have whipped you, Antipodes [a horse], but have I whaled you? T. Winthrop, Canoe and Saddle, xii.

But first I would remark, that it is not a proper plan For any scientific gent to whale his fellow-man.

Bret Harte, The Society upon the Stanislaus.

whaleback (hwāl' bāk), n. 1. Same as turtleback. — 2. A vessel of which the upper deck is rounded: generally without upper works. Such vessels were first used on the great lakes.

whale-barnacle (hwāl' bār' nā-kl), n. A cirriped of the family Coronulidae, parasitic upon whales, as Coronula diadema. See cut under Coronula.

whale-bird (hwāl' bērd), n. 1. One of the blue petrels of the genus Prion, several species of which inhabit the southern ocean. P. vittatus, one of the best-known, is notable for the expanse of its beak, the edges of which are beset with tooth-like processes. The name extends to several other oceanic birds which gather in multitudes when a whale has been captured, feed upon the offal; they are chiefly of the petrel and gu families.

Whale-bird (Prion vittatus).

2. The turnstone, Streptilas interpres. Hearne [Hudson's Bay]. — 3. The red or gray phalarope. Kumlén. [Labrador.]

whale-boat (hwāl' bōt), n. A long narrow boat sharp at both ends, and fitted for steering with an oar as well as with a rudder, used in the pursuit of whales, and, from its handy and sea worthy qualities, also for many other purposes. It is usually from 20 to 30 feet long. A pair of these boats is commonly carried by ocean passenger-steamers in addition to their heavier boats.

whalebone (hwāl' bōn), n. and a. [ME. whal bone, gwale-bon; < whale¹ + bone¹.] I. n. 1. The elastic horny substance which grows in place of teeth in the upper jaw of whales of the family Balenidae (hence called whalebone or bone whales) forming a series of thin parallel plates from a few inches to several feet long; baleen (which see). The term is misleading, for the substance is in no sense bone, but a kind of horn; and its trade-name whale-fin is equally inaccurate, for it has nothing to do with the fins of the whale. Whalebone grows in several hundred close-set parallel plates along each side of the upper jaw of the baleen whale, and thus in the situation occupied by the teeth of ordinary mammals; it is entirely shut in by the lips when the mouth is closed. Each one of the plates of both rows then bends with a strong sweep backward, and when the mouth is opened straightens out, so that there is always a heavy fringe on each side of the cavity of the mouth, forming an impassable barrier to the multitudinous small creatures which the whale scoops in from the surface of the sea. The longest baleen plates are those of the polar whale, some of which may exceed 12 feet in length. The plates in different species differ in color from a dull grayish-black through various streaked or veined colorations to somewhat creamy white. Whalebone stands quite alone among animal substances in a particular combination of lightness, toughness, flexibility, elasticity, and durability, together with such a cleavage (due to the straightness of its parallel fibers) that it may be split for its whole length to any desired thinness of strips. A sulphur-bottom whale has yielded 800 pounds of baleen, of which the longest plates were 4 feet in length. In the California gray whale the longest bone is from 14 to 16 inches, of a light or whitish color, coarse-grained, and heavily and unevenly fringed. The baleen of a finback is of a light lead-color streaked with black, attaining a length of 2 feet 4 inches and a width of from 12 to 14 inches, with a fine fringe from 2 to 4 inches long; it is somewhat ridged crosswise. That of the sharp-headed finner is entirely white, with a short thin fringe; it has been found to consist of 270 pairs of plates, the longest being 10 inches in length. Whalebone is or has been used in the manufacture of a great variety of articles.

2. Something made of whalebone or baleen; a piece of whalebone prepared for some regular use; as, the whalebones of a corset. — 3. Specifically, a whalebone riding-whip.

They're neck and neck; they're head and head:

They're stroke for stroke in the running;

The whalebone whistles, the steel is rod,

No shirking as yet, or shunning.

A. L. Gordon, Visions in the Smoke.

4†. In the middle ages, ivory from the narwhal, walrus, or other sea-creature, or supposed to be from such a source. See whale's bone, under whale¹, n.

To tell of hir tethe that tryetly were set,

Also qwyte & qwen as any gwalle bon.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), 1. 3055.

II. a. Made of or containing whalebone. Their ancient whalebone stays creaked.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 398.

Whalebone whale. See I., 1, and phrase under whale¹.

whale-brit (hwāl' brit), n. Same as brit², 2.

Compare whale¹, n., 1.

whale-built (hwāl' bilt), a. Constructed on the model of a whale-boat.

The Canadian fishing-boats are whale-built. Perley.

whale-calf (hwāl' káf), n. The young of the whale. Also calf-whale.

whale-fin (hwāl' fin), n. In com., a plate or lamina of whalebone; whalebone collectively. [Both whale-fin and whalebone are misnomers, due to original ignorance of the source and nature of the material.]

A duty was imposed upon whale-fins, which, notwithstanding the double duty on fins imported by foreigners, went far toward the ruin of the Greenland trade.

S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 61.

whalefish (hwāl' fish), n. [= D. walvisch = OHG. walfisc, MHG. walvisch, G. walfisch = Icel. hvalfiskr = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk; as whale¹ + fish¹.] A whale.

There be many whalefishes and flying fishes.

R. Eden, in First Books on America (ed. Arber, p. xxviii).

whale-fisher (hwāl' fish' ēr), n. A person engaged in the whale-fishery; a whaler. C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 211.

Four plates of baleen, seen obliquely from within.

whale-fishery (hwāl'fish'ēr-i), n. 1. The occupation or industry of taking whales; also, the men, vessels, etc., engaged in this pursuit.—2. A locality that is or may be resorted to for the taking of whales; a place where whale-fishing is conducted, or where whales abound.

whale-fishing (hwāl'fish'ing), n. The act or occupation of taking whales; whaling.

whale-flea (hwāl'fē), n. Same as whale-louse.

whale-food (hwāl'fōd), n. Same as whale-bait. See *brit*², 2, *whale*¹, n., and cuts under Citona and Limacina.

whale-head (hwāl'hēd), n. A remarkable grallatorial bird of Africa, related to the herons and storks: so called on account of the size of the head and monstrous shape of the beak; the whale-headed stork, or shoebill, Baleniceps rex, the only representative of the family Balenicipidae. See cut under Balenicipidae.

whale-headed (hwāl'hēd'ed), a. Having a large heavy head suggestive of a whale's: noting the shoebill. See whale-head. Encyc. Brit., III. 759.

whale-hunter (hwāl'hun'tēr), n. A whaler.

Other . . . said that . . . he was come as far towards the north as commonly the whale-hunters use to traueil. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 4.

whale-lance (hwāl'lāns), n. The lance used in striking a whale. It may be either a hand-lance or a bomb-lance, but the term is more frequently applied to the former.

whale-line (hwāl'lin), n. Rope from 2 to 3 inches in circumference, made with great care from selected material, and used for harpoon-lines in the whale-fishery. It forms the tow-line of a whale-boat, with which a whale is made fast to the boat by means of the toggle-iron.

Whale-line is three-stranded rope, 2½ inches in circumference, composed of the finest hemp, 32 yards per strand. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 526.

whale-louse (hwāl'lous), n. Any small external parasite of a whale; a fish-louse or epizoid crustacean infesting whales; especially, a lamodipod of the family Cyamidae, as Cyamus ceti and other species of this genus. See cut under Cyamus. Also whale-flea.

whaleman (hwāl'man), n.; pl. whalemen (-men). One who whales; a whaler; especially, one engaged in the actual capture of whales, as distinguished from another indirectly concerned in the industry.

Hundreds of islands in the Pacific Ocean were discovered and chartered by whalemen. The Century, XL. 523.

whale-oil (hwāl'oil), n. The oil obtained from the blubber of a whale or other cetacean. (a) Common oil, or train-oil, is that procured from the blubber of any baleen whale; it has a rank odor, and varies in color from honey-yellow to dark brown, according to the character of the blubber and the method of trying-out. It includes several chemically different substances, the more solidifiable of which may be extracted under pressure and cold, and constitute whale-tallow, the fluid residuum being called pressed oil. (b) Sperm-oil or spermaceti-oil is obtained from the sperm-whale and other toothed cetaceans. That from the head of the whale contains the spermaceti, which is deposited at ordinary temperatures on extraction from the animal, leaving the liquid oil, of a clear yellow color. (See spermaceti.) Sperm-oil when refined is much used as a lubricant for delicate machinery, and that from various cetaceans is often named from them, as grampus-oil, porpoise-oil, etc.—Black whale-oil. (a) Oil from the baleen whales, including the orquals; train-oil. (b) Oil discolored in running machinery.—Pressed whale-oil. See def. (a).

whaler¹ (hwāl'ēr), n. [*< whale*¹ + *-er*¹.] A person or a vessel engaged in the business of capturing whales.

For a whaler's wife to have been "round the Cape" half a dozen times, or even more, was nothing extraordinary. The Century, XL. 511.

But o' Thursday t' Resolution, first whaler back this season, came in port. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, v.

whaler² (hwāl'ēr), n. [*< whale*² + *-er*¹.] Something whaling, or big or extraordinary of its kind; a whopper; a whacker. [Slang.]

whale-rind (hwāl'rind), n. The skin of a whale. It is thick, tough, and for the most part dark-colored, and overlies the blubber somewhat as the rind of a fruit covers the pulp.

whalery (hwāl'ēr-i), n.; pl. whaleries (-iz). [*< whale*¹ + -ery.] 1. The industry of taking whales; whaling.

The whalery not being sufficiently encouraging. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 7.

2. An establishment for carrying on whale-fishery or any of its branches. [Rare.]

They set up a glass-house, a tanyard, a saw-mill, and a whalery. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 12. whale's-food (hwāl'z'fōd), n. Whale-bait. See *brit*², 2, *whale*¹, n., 1, and Citona.

whale-shark (hwāl'shārk), n. 1. A shark of the family Rhinodontidae, Rhinodon typicus, one of the very largest sharks, and native of warm seas. See the technical names.—2. The basking-shark (which see, with cut).

whale-ship (hwāl'ship), n. A ship built for or employed in the business of whale-fishing; a whaling-ship or whaler.

Smeerenberg . . . was the grand rendezvous of the Dutch whale-ships. C. M. Scammon, Marine Mammals, p. 190.

whale-shot (hwāl'shot), n. [< MD. walschot, spermaceti, < wal, whale, + schot, what is cast: see *whale*¹ and shot.] Spermaceti or matter from the head of the whale: formerly so called by the Dutch and English whalers.

whale's-tongue (hwāl'tung), n. A misnomer of the acorn-worms, or species of Balanoglossus, mistranslating the technical generic name.

whaling¹ (hwāl'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *whale*¹, v.] The act or business of taking whales; the pursuit of whales; whale-fishing: much used in compounds, as, a whaling-ship; a whaling-voyage; whaling-grounds; bay-whaling; shore-whaling.—Whaling company, a company engaged in whaling, consisting of a captain, a mate, a cooper, two boat-steerers, and eleven men. The stock consists of boats, whaling-craft, and whaling-gear, and is divided into sixteen equal shares, and the "lay" of each member of the company is the same. The captain and mate are paid a bonus of $200 or $300 for the term engagement, which is one year, and they are also exempt from all expenses of the company. C. M. Scammon.

whaling² (hwāl'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of *whale*², v.] Big, unusual, or extraordinary of its kind; strapping; whopping; whacking: as, a whaling lie. [Slang.]

whaling-gang (hwāl'ing-gang), n. The crew of a whale-boat.

whaling-gun (hwāl'ing-gun), n. Any mechanical contrivance for killing whales by means of an explosive and a projectile, as the bomb-gun, swivel-gun, darting-gun, and whale-rocket.

whalingman (hwāl'ing-man), n. A whaler.

whaling-master (hwāl'ing-mās'tēr), n. A captain of a whaling-craft, or one who is in command of a whaling-station.

whaling-port (hwāl'ing-pōrt), n. A port of entry where whaling-vessels are owned and registered.

whaling-rocket (hwāl'ing-rok'et), n. A special form of rocket used in whaling to carry a harpoon and line, and an explosive shell, into the body of a whale.

whaling-station (hwāl'ing-stā'shōn), n. In shore-whaling, a place where the try-works are located. C. M. Scammon. [Western coast of U. S.]

whall (hwāl), n. See *wall*³.

whallabee (hwāl'ā-bē), n. Same as wallaby.

whally¹ (hwāl'i), a. [For wally*; *< wall*³ + *-y*¹.] Having a greenish tinge, as the eye in glaucoma. Compare wall-eye.

A bearded Gote, whose rugged heare And whally eles (the signe of gelosy) Was like the person selfe whom he did beare. Spenser, F. Q., I. iv. 24.

whaly (hwāl'i), a. [*< whale*¹ + *-y*¹.] Pertaining to or consisting of whales; cetaceous. [Rare.]

The ocean's monarch, whom Ioue did anoint, The great controller of the whaly rancke. Tourneur, Transf. Metamorphosis, st. 39.

whame (hwām), n. [Cf. whamp.] A fly of the genus Tabanus; a breeze or burrel-fly. See *breeze*¹. Derham.

whammel (hwām'el), v. t. Same as whemmlv.

whamp (hwomp), n. [Cf. whame and wop, dial. var. of wasp.] A wasp. [Prov. Eng.]

whampee, n. Same as wampee.

whang¹ (hwang), n. [A var. of thwang, now thong: see thong.] 1. A thong, especially a leathern thong.

He's taen four-and-twenty braid awrrows, And laced them in a whang-O. Sweet Willie and Lady Margerie (Child's Ballads, II. 54).

2. A tough leather, such as is used for thongs, belt-lacing, etc. It is usually made of calf's hide, but sometimes of sealskin or the hide of a dog, woodchuck, racoon, etc.

whang² (hwang), v. [Cf. Sc. whank, beat, flog, also cut off large portions; prob. a var. of whack, confused with *whang*¹.] 1. trans. 1. To beat or bang; thwack; whack; flog; also, to throw with violence. [Provincial or colloq.]

—2. To cut in large slices or strips; slice. [Scotch.]

My uncle set it [a cheese] to his breast, And whang'd it down. W. Beattie, Tales, p. 8. (Jamieson.)

II. intrans. To make or give out a banging noise.

wharfing

Bang, whang, whang, goes the drum.

Browning, Up at a Villa.

whang² (hwang), n. [*< whang*², v.] 1. A blow or thwack; a whack; a beating or banging; a bang. [Colloq.]

The whang of the bass drum.

C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 317.

2. A cut; a piece; a slice; a chunk.

Of other men's lether men take large whanges. Ray, Proverbs (ed. 1678), p. 386.

W! sweet-milk cheese, in mony a whang. Burns, Holy Fair.

3. Formerly, in Maine and some other parts of New England, a house-cleaning party; a gathering of neighbors to aid one of their number in cleaning house.

whangam (hwang'gam), n. A feigned name of some animal (probably meant for whang'em).

A whangam that eats grasshoppers had marked . . . [this one] for its prey, and was just stretching forth to devour it. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xciv.

whang-leather (hwang'leth'ēr), n. See leather and *whang*¹, 2.

whank (hwangk), v. and n. Same as *whang*². [Scotch.]

whap, whapper, etc. See whop, etc.

whappet¹ (hwop'et), n. [< whap + -et.] A blow on the ear. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

whappet² (hwop'et), n. [A var. of wappet, a yelping cur.] A snarling, worthless dog; a cur.

To feare the barking and bawling of a fewe little curres and whappets. Dent, Pathway, p. 248. (Nares.)

As the sturdy steed dashes out the little whappet's brains. Rev. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 55.

wharf (hwārf), n.; pl. wharves, wharfs (hwārvz, hwārfs). [Early mod. E. also irreg. warf; < ME. wherf, a wharf, *< AS. hwearf, hwērf, a dam or bank to keep out water (cf. mere-hwearf, the sea-shore), = D. werf, a wharf, yard, = Icel. hvarf, a shelter, = OSw. hwarf, hw. varf, a ship-builder's yard, = Dan. værft, a wharf, dockyard (G. werft, a wharf, werf, a bank, wharf, < D. and Dan.); prob. orig. a dam or bank to 'turn' or keep out water, and partly identical with AS. hwearf, hwērf, a turning, exchange, a space, a crowd, = OS. hwarf, a crowd, = D. werf, turn, time, = Icel. hvarf, a turning, = OSw. hwarf, turn, time, order, layer, etc., < AS. hweorfan = Icel. hveirfa = OSw. hveirfa, turn: see whereve. Cf. whirl, from the same ult. root.] 1. A platform of timber, stone, or other material built on a support at the margin of a harbor or a navigable stream, in order that vessels may be moored alongside, as for loading or unloading, or while at rest. A wharf may be parallel with and contiguous to the margin, when it is more especially called a quay; or it may project away from it, with openings underneath for the flow of water, when it is distinctively called a pier. (See cuts under piework.) In England wharves are of two kinds: (a) legal wharves, certain wharves in all seaports appointed by commission from the Court of Exchequer, or legalized by act of Parliament; and (b) sufferance wharves, places where certain goods may be landed and shipped by special sufferance granted by the Crown for that purpose. In American seaports wharves generally belong to the municipality, and are often leased to their occupants, but some are private property.

The wharves stretched out towards the centre of the harbor. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

Out upon the wharfs they came, Knight and burgher, lord and dame. Tennyson, Lady of Shalott, iv.

2. The bank of a river, or the shore of the sea.

Duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed That roots itself in ease on Lethæ wharf. Shak., Hamlet, I. 5. 88.

wharf (hwārf), v. i. [< wharf, n.] 1. To guard or secure by a wharf or firm wall of timber or stone. Evelyn.—2. To place or lodge on a wharf.

wharfage (hwārf'āj), n. [< wharf + -age.] 1. Provision of or accommodation at wharves; berthage at a wharf: as, the city had abundant wharfage; to find wharfage for a ship.—2. Charge or payment for the use of a wharf; the charges or receipts for accommodation at a wharf or at wharves. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 135.

wharf-boat (hwārf'bōt), n. 1. In the United States, a boat supporting a platform sometimes used as a wharf in rivers or in other situations where actual wharves do not exist, or where they are impracticable from the great variation in the height of the water. Floating platforms similarly supported, called floats, are used in some European and other river-ports for landing goods and passengers.

2. A boat employed about a wharf or wharves.

wharfing (hwārf'ing), n. [< wharf + *-ing*¹.] 1. A structure in the form of a wharf; materials

Lith. kwetys, Lett. kweesch, wheat (prob. < Teut.); lit. 'that which is white' (with ref. to the color of the grain or the meal), < AS. hwit, etc., white: see *white*¹.] A cereal grain, the product of species of Triticum, chiefly of T. sativum (T. vulgare). The origin of the plant is not clearly known, but it is thought by many to be derived from a grass, Eglops ovata, of the Mediterranean region, now classed as a species of Triticum. The wheat-plant is a grass closely related to barley and rye, having a dense four-sided spike, and grains longitudinally furrowed on one side, turgid on the other. In some varieties the palea bears awns, in others not, the varieties being respectively called bearded and beardless or bald. Some are planted in the spring—spring or summer wheat—others in the fall, maturing the next season—winter wheat. The product of the latter was formerly preferred, but with recent methods of manufacture spring wheat is equally valued. The varieties are further classified as white and red or amber, referring to the color of the grain; among winter wheats, at least, the white are more esteemed. The grain is highly nutritious, containing some 67 per cent. of carbohydrates, 13 per cent. of albuminoids, together with small quantities of the mineral substances, potash, soda, etc., required by the animal system, with only 14 per cent. of water. For use it is chiefly converted into flour; the finest but not the most nutritious flour is nearest pure starch. The richer elements lie nearest the skin, and these are secured in "Graham" flour, which properly includes the whole grain, and by recent milling processes which appropriate all but the outside. Wheat was formerly made in England into a dish called frumenty or furmenty, by boiling it entire in milk, and seasoning. It is now largely used in America in the form of cracked, crushed, or rolled wheat, or wheat-grits. Wheat has been known from antiquity, being mentioned in Scripture; it is traceable to ancient Egypt, and is recorded as introduced into China about 2700 B. C. It now furnishes the principal breadstuff among all civilized nations. It is adaptable to various conditions and widely grown in temperate regions; it is not excluded by cold winters, but requires a mean summer temperature of not less than 57°. Among the principal countries which produce a surplus are the United States, Canada, Russia, Hungary, India, Australia, Egypt, Rumania, and Turkey. The varieties are very numerous, and there are several more or less strongly marked races, one of which is spelt.

There grows in several parts of Africa, Asia, and America a kind of corn called Mays, and such as we commonly name Turkey wheat. They make bread of it which is hard of digestion, heavy in the stomach, and does not agree with any but such as are of a robust and hall constitution.
L. Lemery, Treatise on Foods (1704), p. 71. (Davies.)

We saw a great many fields of Indian corn, which grows to the height of six or seven feet. It is made into flour for the use of the common people, and goes by the name of Turkey wheat.
Smollett, Travels, viii.

Wheat-aphid or -aphis, a wheat plant-louse (see below).—Wheat bulb-fly, Hylemyia arctica, a European fly of the family Anthomyiidae, whose larva infests the stems of wheat.—Wheat bulb-worm, the larva of an osmid fly, Meromyza americana, which affects the stems of wheat in the United States and Canada, stunting the ears, and prematurely ripening the kernels.—Wheat-outworm, the larva of an American noctuid moth, Lophygnia frugiperda. Also called grass-worm and fall army-worm. See Lophygnia. C. V. Riley.

—Wheat-dampening machine, a machine for washing grain to free it from smut and dirt, and afterward drying it. E. H. Knight.—Wheat eel-worm, a nematode worm of the family Anguillulidae, Tylenchus tritici, which causes the disease known as ear-cockle, purples, or false ergot in wheat in Europe. It produces round dark-colored distorted growths in the ear of wheat. Also called wheat-worm.

wheat-bird (hwët'bërd), n. The chaffinch or wheat-sel-bird. [Local, British.]

wheat-brush (hwët'brush), n. In milling, a grain-scouring machine. It consists essentially of two brushes in the form of disks placed close together in a hopper, one brush remaining stationary, and the other revolving rapidly as the grain is delivered between them. The grain is carried to the periphery of the brushes by centrifugal force, and falls into a chamber beneath, whence the dust is removed by a suction-blast. E. H. Knight.

wheat-bug (hwët'bug), n. Either one of two bugs, Miris tritici and M. dolabratus, found commonly on wheat in England. Curtis, Farm Insects.

wheat-caterpillar (hwët'kat'er-pil-lër), n. A small caterpillar which eats the kernels of wheat in the field: supposed to be Asopia costalis. T. W. Harris.

wheat-chafer (hwët'chä'fër), n. A beetle, Anisoplia austriaca, which does great damage to European wheat-fields, particularly those of Russia.

wheat-cracker (hwët'krak'ër), n. A mill for cracking wheat to make grits.

wheat-drill (hwët'dril), n. See *drill*¹, n., 3.

wheat-duck (hwët'duk), n. The American widgeon, Marca americana, found in large flocks in wheat-fields. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Oregon.]

wheat-ear (hwët'ër), n. [< wheat + *ear*².] An ear of wheat.

Gold flashed out from the wheat-ear brown,
And flame from the poppy's leaf.
Eliza Cook.

Wheat-ear stitch, in embroidery, a fancy stitch; a variety of chain-stitch by which is produced a pattern somewhat resembling an ear of grain with stiff beard.

wheatear (hwët'ër), n. [A corruption, simulating wheat + *ear*² (also used in the form white-ear, with the first element unaltered), of whit-earse, or rather of its earlier form whiterse* (taken as a plural, whence the supposed singular white-ear): so called from its white rump, < *white*¹ + arse. The name is equiv. to whitetail, formerly whittail, and the F. name cul blanc.] A chat of the genus Saxicola, Saxicola ananthe, the stonechat, fallow-finch, or whitetail, an oscine passerine bird abundant in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and found sparingly in North America.

The wheatear is 6½ inches long, and 12½ in extent; it varies much in plumage with sex, age, and season. The adult male in summer has the upper parts French gray, with conspicuous white rump and white base of the black tail; the under parts are some shade of buff, often whitish;

the wings are blackish; a broad glossy-black bar on the side of the head includes the ears, and is surmounted by a white stripe; the bill and feet are black, the eyes dark-brown. The female is brownish, darkest on the upper parts, with wings and tail like those of the male; the young resemble the female, but are spotty. The nest is made on the ground; the eggs are four to seven, greenish-blue, usually spotted, sometimes faintly speckled. The wheat-eater shares with both the British species of Pratincola the name stonechat, which is more appropriate to this bird than to either of the bushchats; it is more fully specified as white-rumped stonechat, and also called whiterump, whitetail, stone-clatter (from its Gaelic name clacharan, which survives in Scotland and in books), fallow-finch, and by other local names.

What cook of any spirit would lose her time in picking larks, wheat-eaters, and other small birds?

Swift, Directions to Servants (Cook).

Although the wheat-eater's colors are somewhat chaste, still their bold contrast, and the manner in which they are distributed, make the bird a very pretty one.

Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 302.

wheat-eel (hwēt'ēl), n. [Appar. < wheat + eel, but perhaps a dial. form of wheat-evil*, < wheat + evil.] Ear-cockle or purples, a disease of wheat caused by the eel-worm, Tylenchus tritici.

wheaten (hwē'tn), a. [ME. wheten, hucen, hwæten, < AS. hwæten (= MD. weiten, D. weizen (meel) = G. weizen (brod)), < hwæte, wheat, + -en, E. -en².] Of, pertaining to, or made from wheat: as, wheaten straw. Specifically—(a) Made of the stalks, straw, or husks of wheat.

There wayted Summer naked starko, all saue a wheaten hat.

Golding, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., II.

Peace should still her wheaten garland wear.

Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 41.

(b) Made of the grain or flour of wheat.

fly, a variety of Isosoma hordae, whose larva is the wheat joint-worm. See joint-worm, 2.

wheat-grader (hwēt'grā'dēr), n. In milling, a machine for cleaning, separating, and grading wheat according to the size and shape of the grains; a grain- or wheat-separator. E. H. Knight.

wheat-grass (hwēt'grās), n. The couch- or quitch-grass, Agropyrum repens; also, any wild grass of the genus Agropyrum or Triticum.

wheatland (hwēt'land), n. Land sown with wheat.

Beyond the wheatlands in the northern pines.

A. Langman, The Academy, Nov. 23, 1899, p. 335.

wheat-maggot (hwēt'mag'gt), n. The larva of any one of the dipterous insects affecting the wheat-plant.

wheat-midge (hwēt'mij), n. 1. A dipterous insect of the family Cecidomyiidae, Diplosis tritici, which lays its eggs in the flowers of wheat-heads, and whose minute reddish larvæ devour the kernels. It is originally a European insect, but has been imported into the United States and Canada. The larva is known in England as the red maggot.
2. A dipterous insect, Lasioptera obfusca. Encyc. Dict.

wheat-mildew (hwēt'mil'dū), n. A name applied in England to the common rust (Puccinia graminis), found on various grasses, and especially on wheat and oats. In the United States it is applied to Erysiphe graminis, a true powdery mildew.

wheat-mite (hwēt'mit), n. Same as flour-mite.

wheat-moth (hwēt'mōth), n. One of several small moths whose larvæ devour stored wheat, as the Angoumois grain-moth (Gelechia cerealella), the Indian-meal moth (Ephestia interpunctella), the Mediterranean flour-moth (Ephestia kühniella), or the wolf-moth (Tinea granella).

wheat-pest (hwēt'pest), n. A dipterous insect, the frit-fly, Oscinis vastator.

wheat-riddle (hwēt'rid'li), n. A grain- or wheat-separator.

wheat-rust (hwēt'rūst), n. Same as red rust and black rust (see both, under rust).

wheat-scourer (hwēt'skour'er), n. In milling, a cleaning-machine which receives the grain as passed from the smutter, and removes any hairs or loose parts of the outer bran. One form consists of a stiff brush with a grooved burstone revolving against it below, the wheat passing between the two. E. H. Knight.

wheat-sel-bird (hwēt'sl-bērd), n. The chaffinch, Fringilla caelebs: so called from its congregating in autumn about the time of sowing wheat. J. H. Gurney. See cut under chaffinch. [Norfolk, Eng.]

wheat-separator (hwēt'sep'a-rā-tēr), n. An apparatus for freeing wheat from mustard-seed, cockle, grass-seed, etc. The grain is made to pass over a series of inclined plates pierced with holes which allow the passage of the smaller seeds but retain the wheat. E. H. Knight.

Wheatstone bridge. See resistance, 3.

wheat-thief (hwēt'thēf), n. The corn grower or bastard alkanet, Lithospermum arvense, a grain-field weed of Europe and parts of Asia, introduced in North America.

wheat-thrips (hwēt'thrips), n. Any one of several species of thrips found abundantly upon wheat, and commonly supposed to injure the wheatlands, as Thrips cerealeum of Europe, and Limothrips tritici and L. gramineæ of the United States.

wheat-weevil (hwēt'wē'vl), n. 1. The grain-weevil.—2. The rice-weevil. See also Calandra, 2, and weevil.

wheat-worm (hwēt'wērm), n. Same as wheat eel-worm (which see, under wheat).

wheazer, v. i. An old spelling of weeche.

whedert, pron. An old spelling of *whether*¹.

whedle (hwē'dl), v.; pret. and pp. wheddled, pp. wheddling. wheddling (hwē'dling), n. [Verbal n. of wheddle, v.] The act or art of coaxing, cajoling, or deluding by flattery.

He wrote several pieces, viz. "The English Rogue," "The Art of Wheddling," &c. Aubrey, Lives (Meriton).

wheel¹ (hwēl), n. [ME. wheel, whele, whol, wheel, qwel, hwel, hwegel, hwocol, < AS. hwēol, hwōl, contr. of hweowol, hweohl (= MD. wēel, wiel, D. wiel = LG. wēel, wel = leel, hwōl = OSw. hwīgul, Sw. hwjūl = Dan. hwjūl, a wheel); Teut. appar. hwehula*, hwehula*, perhaps = (G. κικλος, a wheel, circle: see *cycle*¹). The leel, hwel, orb, disk, can hardly be related.] 1. A circular frame or solid disk turning on an axis. Wheels, as applied to vehicles, usually consist of a nave, into which are inserted spokes or radii, connecting it with the periphery or circular ring. (See car-wheel (with cut); also cuts under car-track and felly.) Wheels are most important agents in machinery, being employed in a variety of forms and combinations for a great variety of purposes, as for transmitting motion, regulating velocity, converting one species of motion into another, reducing friction, equalizing the effect of forces applied in an intermittent or irregular manner, etc.

The carters over-ryden with his carte,

Under the whel ful lowe he lay adoun.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), I. 1165.

Snack went the whip, round went the wheels,

Were never folks so glad:

The stones did rattle underneath,

As if Cheapside were mad. Cowper, John Gilpin.

2. Any instrument, apparatus, machine, or other object shaped like a wheel: as, a mill-wheel, a spinning-wheel, or a potter's wheel.

Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

Jer. xviii. 3.

Thus, in lower life, whilst the wheel, the needle, &c., employ her, the plough of some trade perhaps demands the muscles and hardness of him.

W. Wollaston, Religion of Nature, viii. 1.

Turn, turn, my wheel! This earthen jar

A touch can make, a touch can mar.

Longfellow, Keramos.

The meal-sacks on the whiten'd floor,

The dark round of the dripping wheel.

Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

(a) Naut., a circular frame with handles projecting from the periphery, and an axle on which are wound the ropes or chains which connect with the rudder for steering a ship; a steering-wheel. Where a ship is steered by steam, in place of an ordinary wheel a small wheel is used, by turning which steam is admitted to the engines which turn the barrel on which the wheel-ropes are wound. (b) An instrument of torture. See to break on the wheel, under break.

The lifted axe, the agonizing wheel,

Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel.

Goldsmith, Traveller, I. 435.

(c) A firework of a circular shape which revolves on an axis, while burning by the reaction of the escaping gases. See catherine-wheel, 3, and pinwheel, 3. (d) pl. Figuratively, a carriage; a chariot. [Poetical.]

How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Cæsar? art thou led in triumph?

Shak., M. for M., III. 2. 47.

I earth in earth forgot these empty courts,

And thee returning on thy silver wheels.

Tennyson, Tithonus.

(e) One of the attributes of Fortune, the emblem of mutability.

Huanne the Iheuedi of hap [lady of fortune] heth hire hwegel y-went [turned] to the mainne.

Ayenbite of Inuyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

Now y am vndre Fortunes whele,

My frendis forsaken me Euerychoon.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 73.

The next turn of the wheel gave the victory to Edward IV.

J. Gardner, Richard III., I.

(7) A bicycle or a tricycle. [Colloq.]

A plucky long man with a fifty-six inch wheel, who crowned his effort with the difficult performance of bringing his machine to a stand-still before dismounting, and holding it so for several minutes. The Century, XIX. 494.

(g) In zool.: (1) The characteristic organ of a wheel-animalcule; the trochal disk of a rotifer; a wheel-organ (which see). See cut under Rotifer, Rotifera, and trochal. (2) Some discoid or wheel-shaped calcareous or silicious concretion, as of an echinoderm or a sponge; a wheel-spicule.

3. A circular course or motion; a whirling round; a revolution; rotation; also, a wheeling, turning, or bending.

The lead, withouten faille,
Is, lo, the metal of Saturne.
That hath a full large wheel to turne.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1450.

Satan, bowing low, . . .
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel.

Milton, P. L., iii. 741.

4. A motive power; in the plural, machinery; hence, a principle of life or motion.

The wheels of weary life at last stood still.

Dryden and Lee, Edipus, iv. 1.

That power who bids the ocean ebb and flow, . . .
Builds life on death, on change duration founds,
And gives the eternal wheels to know their rounds.

Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 168.

When . . . the heart is sick,
And all the wheels of Being slow.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, l.

5†. The burden of a song; a refrain: perhaps in allusion to its regular recurrence. Stevens.

Oph. [Sings.] You must sing a-down a-down,
An you call him a-down-a.
O, how the wheel becomes it!

Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 172.

6. A factory for grinding cutlery. [Prov. Eng.]

This branch of trade [cutlery grinding] is, in Sheffield, conducted in distinct establishments called wheels.

Encyc. Brit., VI. 784.

7. A dollar. Tufts. [Thieves' jargon.]—8. In embroidery and fancy needlework, an opening, not necessarily circular, filled with radiating bars or brides of thread. It is a common form of decoration for collars and similar washable garments. Sometimes the radiating lines are interspersed with loops, festoons, and the like, or are of different lengths, so that a part of the opening will be filled with more bands than another part, producing diversity of pattern.

9. See *ward*², 11.—Adhesion of wheels to rails. See adhesion.—Aerohydrodynamic wheel. See aerohydrodynamic.—Bastard wheel. See bastard.—Big wheel. Same as large wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Blank wheel, a wheel having no teeth. —Cardiac wheel. See cardiac.—Center-discharge wheel, a turbine in which the water enters from the chute to the periphery of the buckets, passes inward, and is discharged at the center, about the axis. —Chilled wheel. See *chill*¹. —Eccentric wheel. See eccentric. —Elliptical wheel. Same as elliptical. —Engaged wheel. See engaged. —Epicycloidal wheel. See epicycloidal (with out). —Fifth wheel. (a) In mech. See fifth. (b) Figuratively, something superfluous or useless. —Foundling-wheel, a cylindrical box revolving on an upright axis, placed in an aperture in the door or wall of a foundling-asylum. It enables any person to confide an infant to the care of the asylum without being seen.

The ruota or foundling-wheel still exists in 1222 of the communes, being frequent in the Neapolitan provinces and Sicily.

Encyc. Brit., XIII. 449, note.

Impulse-wheel, a form of turbine water-wheel driven by the impulse of a jet.—Intermittent, internal, lapidary wheel. See the adjectives.—Large wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Long wheel, a workman's name for a grindstone driven by a belt and a hand-wheel 5 or 6 feet in diameter, which is turned by a laborer stationed behind the grinder.—Mansell wheel, a railroad-wheel in which the hub is composed of two wrought- or cast-iron rings bolted together. Car-Builders' Dict.—Middle-shot wheel, in hydraul., a breast-wheel which receives the water at about the middle of its height. See cut under breast-wheel.—Multiple wheel, a form of sash-wheel.—Multiplying wheel, a form of multiplying gearing; a geared wheel for converting slower movement into more rapid movement. Compare cut under lantern-wheel.—Mutilated wheel. See mutilated (with out).—Non-circular wheel, a wheel having a perimeter which is not circular, but is elliptical, scroll-shaped, hyperbolic, etc. Two such wheels are employed for transmitting a velocity of variable ratio between a pair of parallel axes. E. H. Knight.—Persian wheel, a water-lifting wheel; a bucket-wheel or noria; an apparatus in which buckets, jars, or box-chambers are arranged in a radial position on a large wheel, which by its revolution dips the vessels in the water, fills them, and raises each in turn to empty its load on another level. It is used especially for irrigation. Compare cut under noria.—Pitch-back wheel, a form of water-wheel in which the water, before descending into the buckets, is turned at an angle with its course in the flume: a kind of breast-wheel in which the water-supply is near the top of the wheel.—Potters' wheel. See *potter*¹ (with out).—Savart's wheel, an acoustical instrument, consisting of a toothed wheel which can be rapidly rotated so as to strike against a card and produce a tone, the vibration-number of which can be accurately determined from the number of the revolutions of the wheel. Compare stren (with out).—Saxon wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Skew wheel. See *skew*¹, 2.—Small wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Spiral wheels, in mech., a form of gearing in which the teeth are formed upon the circumference of cylinders of the required diameter at an angle with their respective axes. By this construction the teeth become in fact small parts of screws or spirals winding round the cylinders (whence the name). Wheels of this kind are often used when the two shafts require to pass each other. When the shafts are in the same plane bevel-wheels are employed.—Split wheel. See split gear, under split.—Sun-and-planet wheels. See *run*¹.—To break a butterfly (fly, etc.) upon a (the) wheel, to subject one to a punishment out of all proportion to the gravity of the offense and the importance of the offender; hence, to employ great means or exertions for the attainment of trifling ends.

Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel,
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?

Pope, Prolog. to Satires, l. 208.

He was sorry . . . for the excellent people, and deplored the necessity of breaking mere house-fias on the wheel.

Dickens, Little Dorrit, ii. 21.

To break upon the wheel. See break.—Toothed wheels. See toothed.—To put a spoke in one's wheel. See *spoke*¹.—To put one's shoulder to the wheel. See shoulder.—To slack over the wheel. See *slack*¹.—To steer a trick at the wheel. See *steer*¹.—Under-shot wheel. See under-shot.—Variable-speed wheels. See variable.—Waved wheel, in mech., a friction-wheel having a waved or convoluted surface, and imparting a reciprocating motion to an arc or lever pressing against its side. E. H. Knight.—Wheel and axle, one of the mechanical powers, consisting in its primary form of a cylindrical axle on which a wheel, concentric with the axle, is firmly fastened. A rope is usually attached to the wheel; the axle is turned by means of a lever; and the rope acts as in the pulley—that is, also upon the principle of the lever.—Wheel barometer, a modification of the siphon barometer. See barometer.—Wheel conching. See *conching*¹, 5.—Wheel crossbow, a crossbow in which the bow is bent by the revolutions of a wheel acting as a windlass. See cut under moulinet.—Wheel-cutting machine. (a) A gear-cutting machine. (b) A device for dividing a circle into any number of equal parts. E. H. Knight.—Wheel-facing machine, a machine with adjustable cutters and rolls for facing the sides of wheels, making the felices of uniform thickness, and forming a bevel. E. H. Knight.—Wheel-finishing machine, a form of slotting-machine for planing off the inner face of locomotive-wheel tires. The cutter is carried at the end of a vibrating lever.—Wheel of life. See zoetrope.—Wheel press, in the manufacture of locomotives and railway-cars, a powerful screw-press or hydraulic press by which wheels are forced on to turned bearings of axes with a frictional binding stress sufficient to hold them in place firmly without keys, set-screws, or other holding devices.—Wheels within wheels, a complication of circumstances, motives, influences, etc. Compare Ezek. i. 16.

It was notorious that, after this secretary retired, the king's affairs went backwards; wheels within wheels took place.

Roger North, Lord Gullford, II. 65.

Wheel tax. See tax.—Wire wheel, a brush-wheel made of wire instead of bristles, used for cleaning and scratching metals preparatory to gilding or silvering. E. H. Knight. (See also breast-wheel, bull-wheel, catharine-wheel, cop-wheel, crown-wheel, dial-wheel, flange-wheel, measuring-wheel, pinwheel.)

wheel¹ (hwél), v. [ME. whelen*, whielen, hweolen; < *wheel*², n.] I. trans. 1. To cause to turn, or to move in a circle; make to rotate, revolve, or change direction.

So had he seen, in fair Castle,
The youth in glittering squadrons start;
Suddenly the flying jennet wheel,
And hurl the unexpected dart.

Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 8.

The sun gradually wheeled his broad disk down into the west.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 438.

The Sun files forward to his brother Sun;
The dark Earth follows wheel'd in her ellipses;
And human things returning on themselves
Move onward, leading up the golden year.

Tennyson, Golden Year.

To wheel the wild scrub cattle at the yard
With a running fire of stockwhips and a fiery run of hoofs.

Contemporary Rev., LII. 406.

2. To convey on wheels or in a vehicle mounted on wheels.

You shall clap her into a post-chaise, . . . wheel her down to Scotland.

Colman, Jealous Wife, l.

"Wheel me a little farther," said her ladyship. "They will follow." I obeyed her again, and wheeled her away from the house with extreme slowness.

D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxviii.

3. To make or perform in a circle; give a circular direction or form to.

Now heaven in all her glory shone, and roll'd
Her motions, as the great first Mover's hand
First wheel'd their course. Milton, P. L., vii. 501.

The silvered kite
In many a whistling circle wheels her flight.

Wordsworth, An Evening Walk.

4. To provide with a wheel or wheels: as, to wheel a cart. Imp. Dict.—5. To cause to move on or as on wheels; rotate; cause to turn: as, to wheel a rank of soldiers.

Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round.

Cooper, Task, iv. 37.

6†. To turn on a wheel.

Fortune on lotte
And under oft gan hem to whielen bothe.

Chaucer, Troilus, l. 120.

7. In tanning, to submit to the action of a pin-wheel. See pinwheel, 2.

The skins next go into the England wheel vat . . . and are wheeled.

C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 530.

8. To shape by means of the wheel, as in pottery. See potter's wheel (under *potter*¹), and *throw*¹, v. t., 2.—9. To break upon the wheel. See break.

II. intrans. 1. To turn on or as on an axis or about a center; rotate; revolve.

His Glory found

Thou first Mobile,

Which mak'st all wheel!

In circle round. Hewell, Letters, I. v. 11.

The moon . . . not once wheeling upon her own center.

2. To change direction of course, as if moving on a pivot or center.

As he to flight his wheeling car address'd,
The speedy jav'lin drove from back to breast.

Pope, Iliad, v. 53.

Steady! steady! the masses of men
Wheel, and fall in, and wheel again,
Softly as circles drawn with pen.

Leigh Hunt, Captain Sword and Captain Pen, II.

3. To move in a circular or spiral course.

Then wheeling down the steep of heaven he flies.

Pope.

The poor gold fish eternally wheeling round his crystal wall.

De Quincy, Secret Societies, II.

The swallow wheeled above high up in air.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 15.

4. To take a circular course; return upon one's steps; hence, to wander; go out of the straight way.

Spies of the Volscies Held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about, else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

Shak., Cor., i. 6. 19.

5. To travel smoothly; go at a round pace; trundle along; roll forward.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend the Egyptian sky
And wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls.

Milton, P. L., xii. 183.

Through the rough copse wheel thou with hasty stride;
I choose to saunter o'er the grassy plain.

Wordsworth, River Duddon, xxx.

6. To move on wheels; specifically, to ride a bicycle or tricycle; travel by means of a bicycle or tricycle. [Colloq.]

The sun, gladdened by the sweet air, shone on the fields and woods, and the ugly barracks and pretty cottages by which we wheeled.

J. and E. R. Pennell, Canterbury Pilgrimage on a Tricycle.

7. To change or reverse one's opinion or course of action: frequently with about.

Being able to advance no further, they are in a fair way to wheel about to the other extreme.

South.

Plato and Aristotle were at a losse,
And wheel'd about again to spell Christ-Crosse.

G. Herbert, The Temple, The Church Militant.

wheel³, n. See *wheel*².

wheel⁴ (hwél), n. An erroneous dialectal form of *wheel*².

wheelage (hwél'āj), n. [*wheel*¹ + -age.] A duty or toll paid for carts, etc., passing over certain ground.

wheel-animal (hwél'an'i-māl), n. A wheel-animalcule.

wheel-animalcule (hwél'an-i-māl'kūl), n. A rotifer. See Rotifera (with cut), also cut under Floscularia, Rotifer, and trochal.

wheel-band (hwél'band), n. The tire of a wheel.

The chariot tree was drown'd in blood, and th' arches by the seat Dispurpled from the horses' hoofs, and from the wheel-bands beat.

Chapman, Iliad, xi. 466.

wheel-barometer (hwél'bā-rom'e-tēr), n. See barometer.

wheelbarrow (hwél'bar'ō), n. [ME. whel-barowe; < *wheel*¹ + *barrow*².] A barrow with one wheel or more, on which it runs. The most common form has one wheel in front and two legs at the rear on which it rests, and two handles by which a person lifts the legs from the ground and carries a part of the load, while he pushes forward the vehicle on the wheel. Express and railroad barrows have two and often three or four wheels, only a small part of the load or none of it being carried by the person using the barrow, or truck, as it is more commonly called. Barrows of this class are commonly made with the wheels toward the middle and handles at each end for convenience in using on narrow steamboat-landings and station-platforms.

Carriola, . . . a wheel-barrow.

Florio.

My author saith he saw some sixteen or twenty carpenters at work upon an engine, or carriage, for six muskets, manageable by one man, and to be crowded before him like a wheelbarrow upon wheels.

Court and Times of Charles I., II. 37.

wheel-base (hwēl'bas), n. In locomotives and railway-cars, the distance between the points of contact of the front and back wheels with the rail.

The distance between the supporting wheels is four feet, which thus forms the rigid wheel-base of the truck.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXI. 201.

wheel-bearer (hwēl'bār'ēr), n. A rotifer or wheel-animalcule.

The little wheel-bearer, Rotifer vulgaris.
Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 202.

wheel-bird (hwēl'bērd), n. The night-jar or goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus: so named from its chirring cry, likened to the noise of a spinning-wheel. Also spinner and wheeler. Compare like use of reeler, 2, and see cuts under goatsucker and night-jar. [Local, Scotland.]

wheel-boat (hwēl'bōt), n. A boat with wheels, to be used either on water or upon inclined planes or railways.

wheel-box (hwēl'boks), n. A box inclosing a wheel, either to lessen the noise of its action or for purposes of safety.

wheel-bug (hwēl'bug), n. A large reduvioid bug, Prionidius cristatus, common throughout the southern United States, having a semicircular toothed thoracic crest like a cogged wheel. It is predaceous, and destroys great numbers of injurious insects, such as willow-slugs, web-worms, cut-worms, and cotton-caterpillars. Also called devil's-riding-horse.

Wheel-bug (Prionidius cristatus), female, natural size.

wheel-carriage (hwēl'kar'āj), n. A carriage moved on wheels, as a coach, chaise, gig, railway-car, wagon, cart, etc.

wheel-case (hwēl'kās), n. In pyrotechnics, a case made of stout paper, filled with a composition, and tied to the rim of a wheel or other revolving-pyrotechnic device, to which it gives a rapid movement of rotation while it burns with a brilliant flame.

wheel-chain (hwēl'chān), n. A chain used for the same purpose as a wheel-rope.

wheel-chair (hwēl'chār), n. A chair or chair-like structure mounted on wheels; a Bath chair; an invalid's chair.

wheel-colter (hwēl'kōl'tēr), n. See colter.

wheel-cross (hwēl'krōs), n. A variety of the ring-cross, in which a small circle occupies the center of the larger one, the arms of the cross radiating from it. The name wheel-cross has been founded upon a supposed intentional resemblance to a wheel, as of the sun-carriage. Worsaae, Danish Arts, p. 66.

wheel-cultivator (hwēl'kul'ti-vā-tor), n. In agri., a form of cultivator supported on wheels.

wheel-cut (hwēl'kut), a. Cut, as glass, by the ordinary process of glass-cutting, which leaves a perfectly polished and perfectly transparent surface. Car-Builder's Dict.

wheel-cutting (hwēl'kut'ing), n. The process or operation of cutting teeth in the wheels used by watch- and clock-makers and for other mechanical purposes.

wheel-draft (hwēl'drāft), n. In steam-engin., a continuous draft or current of smoke and hot air passing around in one direction, as distinguished from a direct, a reverting, or a split draft.

wheeled (hwēld), a. [wheel + -ed.] Furnished with a wheel or wheels, or with any rotating disk, rosette, or the like, as a spur of the modern type.

The wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Cæsar.

Shak., A. and C., iv. 14. 75.

The knights appear to have rejected with particular obstinacy the innovation of the wheeled spur.

Hewitt, Ancient Armour, I. p. xxii.

wheel-engraving (hwēl'en-grā'ving), n. In glass-manuf., same as glass-engraving.

wheeler (hwēl'ēr), n. [wheel + -er.] Hence the surname Wheeler. 1. One who wheels.

Each gang is composed of one moulder, one wheeler, and one boy called an off-bearer.

C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 108.

2. A maker of wheels; a wheelwright.—3. A wheel-horse, or other animal driven in the place of one.

We saw the vehicle turn over altogether, one of the wheelers down with its rider, and the leaders kicking.

Thackeray, Philip, xlii.

4. A worker of wheelwork on sewed muslin. Imp. Dict.—5. That which is provided with a wheel or wheels: used in composition: as, a stern-wheeler; a side-wheeler.

The fast eight-wheelers have the Westinghouse automatic brake on drivers and tender.

The Engineer, LXIX. 260.

6. Same as wheel-bird. [Prov. Eng.]—Near (or high) wheeler, the horse (or mule) on the left-hand side, often ridden.—Off wheeler, the horse (or mule) on the right-hand side; that one which the driver never rides.

wheelerite (hwēl'ēr-it), n. [Named after Lieut. G. M. Wheeler, U. S. A.] A fossil resin found in New Mexico.

wheel-fire (hwēl'fir), n. In chem., a fire which encompasses a crucible without touching it.

wheel-firing (hwēl'fīk'sing), n. See firing, 3.

wheel-guard (hwēl'gārd), n. 1. A circular guard for a sword or dagger. Hewitt, Ancient Armour, II. 258.—2. In a vehicle, a hood to protect the axle from mud, and prevent mud from entering between the axle-box and the spindle; a cuttoo-plate, dirt-board, or round-robin.—Wheel-guard plate, in a vehicle, and also on an artillery-carriage, one of the iron plates fixed on either side of the box or the stock to prevent chafing by the wheels in turning; a rub-iron. E. H. Knight. See cut under gun-carriage.

wheel-head (hwēl'hēd), n. In seal-engraving, the lathe-head of a seal-engravers' engine.

wheel-hoe (hwēl'hō), n. A form of hand-cultivator consisting of a frame mounted on wheels, and carrying one or a number of blades serving as hoes.

wheel-horse (hwēl'hōrs), n. A horse harnessed next to the fore wheel of a vehicle—that is, attached to the pole or shafts—as in a four-in-hand or a tandem; hence, figuratively, a person who bears the brunt, or on whom the burden mostly rests.

In the next room Poelman and Kilianus and Raphaelengius plodded like wheel-horses in dragging obscure texts out of the muddy roads in which copyists and commentators had left them.

The Century, XXXVI. 245.

Whenever . . . offices are to be filled, we desire such men as he, and not old political hacks and . . . wheel-horses, should fill them.

The Nation, XIII. 287.

wheel-house (hwēl'hous), n. Naut., same as pilot-house.

Wheelhouse's operation for stricture. See operation.

wheeling (hwēl'ing), n. [Verbal n. of wheel, v.] 1. The act of traveling or of conveying a load on wheels, or in a wheeled vehicle.

The sleighing is not as good as it was, and the state of the streets admits wheeling.

Upper Ten Thousand, ii.

Wheeling bridge case. See casel.

wheel-jack (hwēl'jak), n. 1. A lifting-jack having a projection to catch under the tire of a wheel.—2. An apparatus of which the lifting-bar is a cogged rack, worked by a pinion and hand-crank.

wheel-jointer (hwēl'join'tēr), n. A machine for trimming joints of staves, heading, etc. E. H. Knight.

wheel-lathe (hwēl'lāth), n. A power-lathe for turning railway-wheels and similar large work.

—Double wheel-lathe, a wheel-lathe so made that it can work upon a pair of wheels without removing them from the axle.

Wheel-lack.

a, lock-plate, supporting all the lock mechanism; b, wheel, with grooves of V-section to form circumferential edges; c, chain connecting the axle of b with the extremity of the mainspring d; e, trigger; f, flash-pan; g, the serpentine holding the flint; A, spring which presses the flint upon the wheel in firing, or holds it away when winding up the lock; h, sear and sear-spring, the sear engaging the wheel by a short stud entering recesses in the side of the wheel; i, wrench, fitted to the axle of b, for winding up the chain, and having a hollow handle for measuring out the priming-powder.

wheel-lock (hwēl'lok), n. 1. A lock for firing a gun by means of the friction of a small steel wheel against a piece of sulphuret of iron (pyrites). The wheel was turned by a spring, which was released by a trigger, or trigger, and wound up again by means of a spanner. See cut in preceding column, and cut under primer.

2. A combination-lock or letter-lock.—3. A form of brake; a wagon-lock.

wheelman (hwēl'mān), n.; pl. wheelmen (-men).

1. The man at the wheel of a vessel; a steersman.—2. One who uses a bicycle, tricycle, or similar conveyance. [Recent.]

In the parlors the costumes of the wheelmen seemed not so much out of place.

The Century, XIX. 490.

wheel-ore (hwēl'ōr), n. A variety of bournonite in compound crystals resembling a cog-wheel.

wheel-organ (hwēl'ōr'gan), n. The characteristic organ of the wheel-animalcules or rotifers, formed by the anterior part of the body: so called from the movement of its cilia. whidah (hwid'ā), n. [Also whydah, whidaw, whydah; short for whidah-bird; < Whidah, Whydah, the chief seaport of Dahomey, West Africa.] Same as whidah-bird.—Whidah thrush. See *thrush*¹.

whidah-bird (hwid'ā-bērd), n. [Also whydah-bird, widow-bird; < Whidah, a locality in Dahomey, where the birds abound. See whidah, and Necklaced Whidah-bird (Colinus passer or Penthetia ardens), male.

cf. Vidua.] An oscine passerine bird of Africa, belonging to the family Ploceidae, or weaver-birds, and subfamily Viduinæ in a strict sense, and especially to the genus Vidua, or one of two or three closely related genera. They are small-bodied birds, about as large as a canary; but the males have several feathers of the tail enormously lengthened and variously shaped, forming a beautiful arched train. Any one of them is also called whidah-finch, whidah, widow-bird, and simply whidah or widow, as well as by the French name zeu. The original whidah-bird, or widow of paradise, is Vidua (or Steganura) paradisæ, described and figured under Vidua (which see). The king whidah-bird is Vidua regia (see Vidua regia, with cut). The principal whidah-bird (see Vidua principis (see Vidua, with cut). The South African necklaced whidah-bird is Colinus passer or Penthetia ardens, the male of which is 12 inches long, with a tail of 8½, and has the plumage nearly uniform black, normally varied with a scarlet (sometimes orange) necktie or collar on the fore-neck. The female is quite different, and only 4½ inches long. This bird has been known for more than a century, and has acquired an extensive and intricate synonymy, chiefly of worthless New Latin names. The other whidah here figured is also South African, and has in the male a train of several long tail-feathers resembling in development and in general effect the upper tail-coverts of the paradisotrogon; it is also very large, the male being about 19 inches long. This is Chera procne, the epaulet whidah, so called from the scarlet shoulders, in translation of a French name. Its original technical name was Emberiza procne (of Boddaert, 1783, whence Chera procne of most modern writers), and it used to be called Emberiza or Fringilla or Vidua longicauda, and Loxia or Fringilla or Chera caffra; but it is a monotype whose synonymy presents no serious difficulty. It inhabits from Cape Colony to Natal and the Transvaal, and also to Benguela. Other whidah-birds are noted under Vidua (which see).

Epaulet Whidah-bird (Chera procne), male.

whidah-finch (hwid'ā-finch), n. A whidah-bird. Also widow-finch.

whidder (hwid'er), v. i. [Cf. *whid*¹.] 1. To shake; tremble. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To whid; whizz. [Scotch.]

He heard the bows that bauldly ring,
And arrows whidderan hym near bi.
Song of the Outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 25).

whiew, v. i. See *whew*², 1.

*whiff*¹ (hwif), n. [Cf. W. chwiff, a whiff, puff, chwifio, puff, chwaff, a gust; Dan. wift, a puff, gust. Cf. also *waff*¹, puff, fuff, G. piff, paff, similar imitative words. Hence whiffle.] 1. A slight blast or gust of air; especially, a puff of air conveying some smell.

Pyrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and whid of his fell sword
The unnerved father falls. Shak., Hamlet, II. 2. 495.

For when it [my nose] does get hold of a pleasant whiff or so, . . . it's generally from somebody else's dinner, a-coming home from the baker's. Dickens, Chimes, I.

2. A quick inhalation of air, and especially of smoke; a drawing or drinking in of smoke; also, a draught or drink, as of wine or liquid.

To entertain the most gentlemanlike use of tobacco; . . . the rare corollary and practice of the Cuban abolition, curpius, and whiff.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, III. 1.

Whiff, indeed, occurs in a dull, prosing account of tobacco in the Queen's Arcadia, from which, as well as from what our author says elsewhere, it would seem to be either a swallowing of the smoke, or a retaining it in the throat for a given space of time.

Gifford, Note to the above passage.

Then let him shew his several tricks in taking it [tobacco], as the whiff, the ring, &c., for these are complements that gain gentlemen no mean respect.

Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 120.

I will yet go drink one whiff more.

Urruhart, tr. of Rabelais, I. 6.

3. A sudden expulsion of air, smoke, or the like from the mouth; a puff.

Four Pipes after Dinner he constantly smokes;
And seasons his Whiffs with impertinent Jokes.
Prior, Epigram.

The skipper, he blew a whiff from his pipe.
Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

4. A hasty view; a glimpse; a gliff. [Prov. Eng.]—5. At Oxford and other places on the Thames, a light kind of outrigger boat. It is timber-built throughout, thus differing from a skiff, which is a racing-boat, usually of cedar, and covered with canvas for some distance at the bow and stern. Eneyc. Diet.

The whiff is a vessel which recommends itself to few save the ambitious freshman. . . . It combines the disadvantages of a dingey and a skiff, with the excellences of neither. Dickens's Dict. Oxford, p. 19.

Oral whiff, or Drummond's whiff. See oral.

whiff¹ (hwif), v. [See whiff¹, n.] I. intrans. 1. To puff; blow; produce or emit a puff or whiff. When through their green boughs whiffing winds do whirl, With wanton puffs their wailing locks to curl. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 2.

2. To drink. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To puff; puff out; exhale; blow: as, to whiff out rings of smoke.—2. To carry as by a slight blast or whiff of wind.

Old Empedocles's way, who, when he leapt into Ætna, having a dry sear body, and light, the smoke took him and whiffed him up into the moon.

B. Jonson, World in the Moon.

How was it scornfully whiffed aside!

Carlyle, French Rev., l. v. 2.

3†. To draw in; imbibe; inhale: said of air or smoke, and frequently of liquids also.

Every skull

And skip-lacke now will have his pipe of smoke, And whiff it bravely till hee's like to choke.

Times Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 71.

In this season we might press and make the wine, and in winter whiff it up. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, l. 27.

whiff² (hwif), n. [Origin obscure.] An anacanthine or malacopterygious fish of the family Pleuronectidae, a kind of flatfish or flounder, the Cynoglossus microcephalus, found in British waters; the smear-lab, sail-fluke, or marysole.

whiff³ (hwif), v. i. [An error for whip, v. i., 2.] To fish, as for mackerel, with a hand-line. See whiffing, n.

One might as well argue that, because bits of red flannel or of tobacco-pipe are highly successful baits in whiffing for Mackerel, therefore these substances form a "favourite food" of this fish. Nature, XLI. 638.

whiffer (hwif'ér), n. [whiff¹ + -er.] One who whiffs.

Great tobacco-whiffers:

They would go near to rob with a pipe in their mouths.

Beau. and Fl., Wlt at Several Weapons, iv. 1.

whiffet (hwif'et), n. [whiff¹ + -et.] 1. A little whiff. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]—2. A whipper-snapper; a whipster; any insignificant or worthless person. [U. S.]

The sneaks, whiffets, and surface rats.

Philadelphia Times, Aug. 1, 1838.

whiffing (hwif'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whiff³, v.] 1. Surface-fishing with a hand-line.

Whiffing, the process of slowly towing the bait (sculling or pulling in the known haunts of the fish).

Field, Dec. 26, 1855. (Encyc. Dict.)

It [the whiting] is often caught by whiffing, when it gives good sport. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 278.

2. A kind of hand-line used for taking mackerel, pollack, and the like.

whiffing-tackle (hwif'ing-tak'l), n. The tackle used in whiffing; surface-tackle.

whiffle (hwif'l), v.; pret. and pp. whiffled, ppr. whiffing. [Freq. of whiff¹; perhaps confused with D. weifelen, waver.] I. intrans. 1. To blow in gusts; hence, to veer about, as the wind.

Two days before this storm began, the Wind whiffled about to the South, and back again to the East, and blew very faintly. Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 66.

Seizing a shovel, he went by the back door to the front of the house, at a spot where the whiffing winds had left the earth nearly bare [of snow], and commenced his subnivean work. S. Judd, Margaret, l. 17.

2. To change from one opinion or course to another; use evasions; prevaricate; be fickle or unsteady; waver.

A person of a whiffing and unsteady turn of mind, who cannot keep close to a point of a controversy. Watts, Improvement of the Mind, l. ix. § 27.

3. To trifle; talk idly. Phillips, 1706; Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

I am not like those officious and importunate sots who, by force, outrage, and violence, constrain an easy, good-natured fellow to whiffle, quaff, carouse, and what is worse. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, III. 301.

II. trans. 1. To disperse with a puff; blow away; scatter.

Such as would whiffle away all these truths by resolving them into a mere moral allegory.

Dr. H. More, Epistles to the Seven Churches, ix. [Latham.]

2. To cause to change, as from one opinion or course to another.

Every man ought to be steadfast and unmovable in them [the main things of religion], and not suffer himself to be whiffled out of them by an insignificant noise about the infallibility of a visible church. Tiltonson, Sermons, lxxv.

3. To shake or wave quickly. Donne.

whifflet (hwif'l), n. [whiffle, v., in sense of orig. verb.] A fife.

Whifflet, . . . one that plays on a Whiffle or Fife.

Bailey, 1727.

whiffer (hwif'ler), n. [whiffle + -er.] 1†. A piper or fifer.

His former transition was in the faire about the Jugglers; now he is at the Pageants among the Whiffers. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

2†. A herald or usher; a person who leads the way, or prepares the way, for another: probably so called because the pipers (see piper¹, 1) usually led the procession.

The deep-mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whiffer fore the king
Seems to prepare his way.

Shak., Hen. V., v., cho., l. 12.

The term [whiffer] is undoubtedly borrowed from whiffle, another name for a fife or small flute; for whiffers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. F. Douce, Illus. of Shakespeare, p. 311.

I can go in no corner but I meet with some of my whiffers in their accountments.

Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, III. 1.

The Whiffers of your inferior and Chiefe companies cleere the wayes before him.

Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins, p. 43.

Before the dame, and round about,
March'd whiffers and staffers on foot.

S. Butler, Hudibras, II. II. 650.

3. One who whiffles; one who changes frequently his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument; a fickle or unsteady person.

Your right whiffer indeed hangs himself in Saint Martin's, and not in Cheapside.

Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, II. 1.

Every whiffer in a laced coat . . . shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

4. A puffer of tobacco; a whiffer. Halliwel.—

5. The whistling, or goldeneye duck. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Maryland.]

whiffery (hwif'ler-i), n. The characteristics or habits of a whiffer; trifling; levity.

Life is no frivolity, or hypothetical coquetry or whiffery.

Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, III.

whiffletree (hwif'l-tré), n. [whiffle, turn, + tree. Cf. whippetree, swinglotree.] Same as swinglotree.

Heywood, English Traveller (ed. Pearson), l. 2.

2. Buttermilk. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

whig² (hwig), v.; pret. and pp. whiggled, ppr. whiggling. [Cf. Sc. whiggle, var. of wiggle; see wiggle.] I. intrans. To move at an easy and steady pace; jog. [Scotch.]

The Solemn League and Covenant

Came whiggling up the hills, man.

Battle of Cultercrankie (Child's Ballads, VII. 155).

To whig awa' wi', to drive briskly on with. Jamieson.

I remember hearing a Highland farmer in Eskdale, after giving minute directions to those who drove the hearse of his wife how they were to cross some boggy land, conclude, "Now, lads, whig awa' wi' her."

Scott, (Jamieson).

II. trans. To urge forward, as a horse. [Scotch.]

whig³ (hwig), n. and a. [Formerly also whigg; prob. short for whiggamore, q. v.] I. n. 1. One of the adherents of the Presbyterian cause in Scotland about the middle of the seventeenth century: a name given in derision.

When in the teeth they dar'd our Whigs,

An' covenant true blues, man.

Burns, Battle of Sheriff-Muir.

I doubt I'll hae to tak the hills wi' the wild whigs, as they ca' them, and . . . be shot down like a mawkin at some dyke-side. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

2. [cap.] A member of one of the two great political parties of Great Britain, the other being the Tories (later the Conservatives). The Whigs were the successors of the Roundheads of the Civil War and the Country party of the Restoration. The name was given to them about 1679 as a reproach by their opponents, the Court party, through a desire to confound them with the rebel Whigs of Scotland (see whig³, 1). The Whigs favored the Revolution of 1688–9, and governed Great Britain for a long period in the eighteenth century. In general, they may be called the party of progress; one of their principal achievements was the passage of the Reform Bill in 1832. About the same time the name Whig began to be replaced by Liberal, though still retained to denote the more conservative members of the Liberal party. See Liberal, Temp.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year: And . . . those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north: And from a word, Whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whigs. Now in that year, after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the Ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh. And they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, paying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argyll and his party came and headed them, they being about 6,000. This was called the Whiggamors' inroad. And ever after that all that opposed the Court came in contempt to be called Whiggs. And from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, l. 58.

I hate a Whig so much that I'll throw my Husband on of his Election, or throw myself out of the World! A Parcel of canting Rogues; they have always Moderation in their Mouths—rank Resistance in their Hearts—and hate Obedience even to their lawful Wives.

Mrs. Cendlivre, Gotham Election, l. 1.

The prejudice of the Tory is for establishment; the prejudice of the Whig is for innovation. A Tory does not wish to give more real power to Government, but that Government should have more reverence. Then they differ as to the Church. The Tory is not for giving more legal power to the Clergy, but wishes they should have a considerable influence, founded on the opinion of mankind; the Whig is for limiting and watching them with a narrow jealousy. Johnson, in Boswell, an. 1781.

3. [cap.] In Amer. hist.: (a) A member of the patriotic party during the revolutionary period.

The Hessians and other foreigners, looking upon them as the right of war, plunder wherever they go, from both Whigs and Tories, without distinction.

Robert Morris, Dec. 21, 1776, quoted in Lecky's Eng. h 18th Cent., xiv.

(b) One of a political party in the United States which grew up, in opposition to the Democratic party, out of the National Republican party. It was first called the Whig party in 1834. Its original principles were extension of nationalizing tendencies, and support of the United States Bank, of a protective tariff and of a system of internal improvements at national expense. It won the presidential elections of 1840 and 1848 but soon after divided upon the slavery question. It lost its last national election in 1862, and soon after many of its members became temporarily members of the American and Constitutional Union parties, but eventually most of its northern members became Republicans, most of its southern members Democrats.—Conscience-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were indisposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question: so called from their conscientious objections to such compromises with slavery.—Cotton-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were disposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question: so called from their supposed partiality to the cotton in interest.

II. a. Relating to or composed of Whigs, in any use of that word; whiggish: as, Whig measures; a Whig ministry.

The hope that America would supply the main materials for the suppression of the revolt [the American Revolution] proved wholly chimerical. One of the first acts of the Whig party in every colony was to disarm Tories.

Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

The Whig party was always opposed to slavery. But there was a broad and well-understood distinction between Whig opponents of slavery and the fanatical Abolitionists. T. W. Barnes, Thurlow Weed, p. 306.

whig⁴ (hwig), n. A variant of wig². [North Eng. and Scotch.]

A cook whose recipes were hopelessly old-fashioned, and who had an exasperating belief in the sufficiency of buttered whigs and home-made marmalade for all require ments. Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, II.

whiggamore (hwig'a-mör), n. [Also whiggamor whiggamore; according to Burnet, derived from whiggam, as used by the men orig. called whiggamores (def. 1) in driving their horses; whiggam is a dubious word, appar. connected with *whig*², jog: see *whig*². In the glossary to the Waverley novels whiggamore is defined "a great whig," appar. implying a derivation < *whig*³ + Gael. mor, great; whereas the evidence indicates that *whig*³ is an abbr. of whiggamore. No Gael. form that could be the base of whiggamore appears; but it may be a perverted form from an original not now obvious.] 1. A person who came from the west and southwest of Scotland to Leith to buy corn. See the quotation from Bishop Burnet, under Whig³, 2.—2. One of the people of the west of Scotland who marched to Edinburgh in 1648, their expedition being called the whiggamores' inroad (see the quotation referred to in def. 1). Hence—3. A Scotch Presbyterian; one of the party opposed to the court; a whig.

There [at Bothwell Bridge] was he and that sour whiggamore they ca'd Burley. Scott, Old Mortality, xxxvii.

whiggarchy (hwig'är-ki), n. [whig³ + -archy, rule.] Government by Whigs. [Rare.]

They will not recognise any other government in Great Britain but whiggarchy only.

Swift, App. to Conduct of the Allies.

whiggery (hwig'ér-i), n. [whig³ + -ery.] The principles or practices of Whigs: first applied to the Scottish Presbyterian doctrine, and generally used as a term of contempt.

It has nse whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem—the next thing was to be set up a conventicle in my very withdrawing room.

Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

Our friend was a hearty toper in the days of his Whiggery, but no sooner turned one of the taster of Tories than he took to the teapot. It seems a thing against nature.

Notes Androsian, Sept., 1882.

whiggification (hwig'-i-fikā'shon), n. [< whig³ + -ification.] A making or becoming whiggish. [Humorous.]

We were all along against the whiggification of the Tory System.

Notes Androsian, Sept., 1882.

whiggish (hwig'-ish), a. [< whig³ + -ish¹.] Of or pertaining to whigs, in any application of the name; partaking of the principles of whigs.

To the shame and grief of every whiggish, loyal, and true Protestant heart.

Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

whiggishly (hwig'-ish-li), adv. In a whiggish manner.

Being whiggishly inclined, [Thomas Cox] was deprived of that Office in Oct., 1683.

Wood, Fasti Oxon., II. 54.

whiggishness (hwig'-ish-nes), n. The character of being whiggish; whiggery.

Mr. Walpole has himself that trait of Whiggishness which peculiarly fits him to paint the portrait of the chief of the Whigs.

The Academy, Nov. 16, 1889, p. 811.

whiggism (hwig'-izm), n. [< whig³ + -ism.] The principles of the whigs; whiggery.

whippoorwill (hwip'pōr-wil'), n. [Formerly also whippowill (cf. poor-will); an imitative word, from the sound or cry made by the bird, as if 'whip poor Will.'] An American caprimulgid bird, Antrostomus vociferus, related to the chuck-will's-widow, A. carolinensis, and resembling the European goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus. It is 9 to 10 inches long, and 16 to 18 in extent of wings (being thus much smaller than the chuck-

Whippoorwill (Antrostomus vociferus).

will's-widow, and lacks the lateral filaments of the rectal bristles. The coloration is intimately variegated with gray, black, white, and tawny, giving a prevailing gray or neutral tone, somewhat frosted or hoary in high-plumaged males, ordinarily more brownish; there are sharp black streaks on the head and back; the wings and their coverts are barred with rufous spots; the lateral tail-feathers are black, with a large terminal area white in the male, tawny in the female; and there is a throat-bar white in the male, tawny in the female. The bill is extremely small, but the mouth is deeply cleft, and as wide from one corner to the other as the whole length of the rostrum (as figured under Antrostrat). There has been some popular confusion between the whippoorwill and the night-hawk; they are not only distinct species, but belong to different genera, and their dissimilarity appears at a glance. Unlike the night-hawk, the whippoorwill is entirely nocturnal; it flies with noiseless wings, like the owl, and is often heard than seen. The notes which have given the name are tri-syllabic (compare poor-will), and rapidly reiterated, with a strong accent on the last syllable; a click of the beak and some low muffled sounds may also be heard when the bird is very near. The eggs, two in number, are laid on the ground, or on a fallen log or stump, without any nest; they are creamy-white, heavily clouded and marked with brown and neutral tints, nearly equal-ended, and 1.25 by 0.90 inch in size. The young are covered with fluffy down. The whippoorwill inhabits the eastern half of the United States and British provinces; it breeds nearly throughout its range, but winters extraliminally. A western variety is sometimes specified as the Arizona whippoorwill; but the place of whippoorwill is mostly taken in the west by the poor-wills, as Nuttall's. Several other species of Antrostomus are found in Mexico and Central and South America.

The moan of the whip-poor-will from the hillside; the boding cry of the tree-toad, that harbinger of storm; the dreary hooting of the screech-owl.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 424.

whirlpit (hwér'l'pít), n. [< whirl + pit.] A whirlpool.

The deepest whirl-pit of the rav'nous seas.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, II. 2.
This whirl-pit is said to have thrown up her wracks near Tauromenia.
Sandys, Traveller, p. 192.

whirlpool (hwér'l'pól), n. [Early mod. E. whirlpoole, whirlpole; < whirl + pool.] 1. A circular eddy or current in a river or the sea produced by the configuration of the channel, by meeting currents, by winds meeting tides, etc.
The celebrated whirlpool of Charybdis between Sicily and Italy, and the Maelstrom off the coast of Norway, are not whirlpools in the strict sense, but merely superficial commotions caused by winds meeting tidal currents, and in calm weather are free from danger. Instances of vortical motion, however, do occur, as in the whirlpool of Corrybrekan in the Hebrides, between Jura and Scarba, and in some eddies among the Orkneys.

Greedy Whirl-pools, ever-wheeling round,
Suck in, at once, Oars, Sails, and Ships to ground.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Battle of Ivory.

2†. Some huge sea-monster of the whale kind;
a whirl-whale; a whirl-about.

The Indian Sea breedeth the most and the biggest fishes that are; among which the whales and whirlpools, called balenas, take up in length as much as four acres or arpens of land.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, I. 235. (Trench.)

whirl-puff (hwér'l'puf), n. [< ME. whirlpuff; < whirl + puff.] A whirlwind. Wyclif.

A whirl-puffe or ghost called Typhon.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, II. 48.

whirlwater (hwér'l'wá'tér), n. An old name for a waterspout.

There was no other water fell over the duke's water-gate than what came of the breaking there of the whirlwater, or, as some call it, the water-pillar.

Court and Times of Charles I., I. 114.

whirl-whale (hwér'l'hwál), n. A monster of the whale kind; a whirl-about; a whirlpool.

Another, swallowed in a Whirl-Whales womb,
Is laid a-live within a living Tomb.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., The Laws.

whirlwig (hwér'l'wig), n. [A var. of whirligig, perhaps simulating -wig in earwig.] Same as whirligig, 4.

whirlwind (hwér'l'wind), n. [< ME. whyrlewind, quirl-wind, a whirling wind, = D. werel-wind = G. wirbelwind = Icel. hvírfilvindr = Sw. hvírfjölwind = Dan. hvírfjölind, a whirlwind; as *whirl + wind*2, n.] 1. A wind moving in a circumscribed circular path; a mass of air, of which the height is generally very great in comparison with its width, rotating rapidly round a vertical or slightly inclined axis, this axis having at the same time a progressive motion over the surface of the land or sea. Whirlwinds vary greatly in dimensions and intensity, the term including the miniature eddy that circles in the dusty street, the towering sand-pillars of the tropical deserts, the waterspout formed over bodies of water, and the destructive tornado of the United States. They arise when the atmosphere is in a condition of instability, and are one of the processes by which a stable condition is regained.

The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind.
Job xxxviii. 1.

2. Figuratively, any wild circling rush resembling a whirlwind.

There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelm'd
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns.
Milton, P. L., I. 77.

What a whirlwind is her head!
Byron.
The deer was flying through the park, followed by the whirlwind of hounds and hunters.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxi.

To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. See *wind*2.

whirl-worm (hwér'l'wérn), n. A turbellarian;
any member of the Turbellaria.

whirly-bat (hwér'li-bat), n. Same as whirlbat.

Very true, and he also propos'd the fighting with Whirly-bats too, and I don't like that Sport.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 84.

whirret (hwir'et), n. [Perhaps from whir.]
A slap; a blow. Also written wherret, whirrit, whirrick.

And in a fume gave Furius
A whirret on the eare.
Kendall, Flowers of Epigrams (1577). (Nares.)

I forthwith went, he following me at my heels, and now and then giving me a whirret on the ear, which, the way to my chamber lying through the hall where John Bauce was, he, poor man, might see and be sorry for, as I doubt not that he was, but could not help me.
T. Elwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 222.

Then there's your souse, your wherret, and your dowst,
Tags on the hair, your bob o' the lips,—a whelp on 't!
I ne'er could find much difference.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, III. 2.

whirret (hwir'et), v. t. [Also wherret, etc.; cf.
whirret, n.] 1. To hurry; trouble; tease. Bickerstaff, Love in a Village, I. 5.—2. To give a box on the ear to. Beau, and Fl.

whirrick (hwir'ik), n. A variant of whirret.
Harry . . . gave master such a whirrick!
H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, I. 21. (Davies.)

whirrit, n. and v. See whirret.

whirry (hwér'i), v. [A dial. form of whir or of hurry.] I. intrans. To fly rapidly with noise;
whir; hurry.

II. trans. To hurry. [Scotch in both uses.]

whirtle (hwér'tl), n. [Origin obscure.] A perforated steel plate through which pipe or wire is drawn to reduce its diameter. E. H. Knight.

whish1 (hwish), v. t. [Imitative; cf. whis and swish.] To move with the whirring or whizzing sound of rapid motion.

The scenery of a long tragic drama flashed through his mind as the lightning-express train whishes by a station.
O. W. Holmes, Professor, VI.

whish2 (hwish), interj. [Var. of hush.] Hush.

What means this peevish babe? Whish, lullaby;
What ails my babe? what ails my babe to cry?
Quarles, Emblems, II. 8.

whish2 (hwish), a. [Var. of hush.] Silent:
same as hush, whisht, *whist*1.

You took my answer well, and all was whish.
Sir J. Harrington, Ep., I. 27.

whishey, whishie (hwish'i), n. The white-throat, Sylvia cinerea. Macgillivray. Also what-tie.

whisht (hwisht), interj. and v. [Var. of hush.]
Same as hush, *whist*1.

When they perceived that Solomon, by the advice of his father, was annoyed king, by and by there was all whisht.
Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

whisk1 (hwisk), n. [Prop. wisk*; < Icel. visk, a wisp of hay, something to wipe with, a rubber, = Sw. viska, a whisk, small broom, = Dan.
visk, a wisp, rubber, = D. wisch = OHG. wisc, MHG. G. wisch, a whisk, clout; prob. connected with wash. The verb is from the orig.
noun; but the noun in the later senses ('act of whisking,' etc.) is from the verb.] 1. A wisp or small bunch, as of grass, hair, or straw; specifically, such a wisp used as a brush, broom, or besom, and especially in modern usage one made of the ripened panicle of broom-corn (see broom-corn and Sorghum), used for brush-ing the dust off clothes, etc.

If you happen to break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree or the cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift, Advice to Servants (Chamber-maid).

The ceiling was divided by whisks of flowers, with a margin of honeysuckles.
S. Judd, Margaret, II. 11.

2. An instrument used for whisking, agitating, or beating certain articles, such as cream or eggs.—3. A cooper's plane for leveling the chimes of casks.—4. A neckerchief worn by women in the seventeenth century. Also called falling-whisk, apparently in distinction from the ruff.

My wife in her new lace whiske, which indeed is very noble, and I am much pleased with it.
Pepps, Diary, II. 217.

With whisks of lawn, by grannums wore,
In base contempt of bishops sleeves.
Hudibras Redivivus (1706). (Nares.)

5. A brief, rapid sweeping motion as of something light; a sudden stroke, whiff, puff, or gale.

This first sad whisk
Takes off thy dukedom; thou art but an earl.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, v.

He turned with an angry whisk on his heel, and swaggered with long strides out of the gate.

J. S. Le Fanu, Dragon Volant, IV.
If a whisk of Fate's broom snap your cobweb asunder.
Lowell, Blondel, II.

6†. A servant. [Contemptuous.]
This is the proud brachas whiske.
Brome, Novella.

7. An impertinent fellow. Halliwel. [Prov.
Eng.]—Mexican or French whisk. Same as broom-root.

whisk1 (hwisk), v. [Prop. wisk (as in dial. use);
< Sw. viska, wipe, sponge, also wag the tail, =
Dan. viske, wipe, rub, sponge, = OHG. wisken, MHG. G. wischen, wipe, rub; from the noun.]
I. trans. 1. To sweep or brush with a light, rapid motion: as, to whisk the dust from a table.

She advanced to the fire, rearranged the wood, picked up stray brands, and whisked up the coals with a brush.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, xiv.

2. To agitate or mix with a light, rapid motion; beat: as, to whisk eggs.—3. To move with a quick, sweeping motion or flourish; move briskly.

His papers light fly diverse, toss'd in air;
Songs, sonnets, epigrams the winds uplift,
And whisk 'em back to Evans, Young, and Swift.
Pope, Dunciad, II. 116.

4. To flourish about.

Who? he that walks in grey, whisking his riding-rod?
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, II. 1.

5. To carry suddenly and rapidly; whirl.

The outsiders [in open railway-carriages], who experienced the inconvenience of the smoke as well as the cold atmosphere through which they were whisked.
Quoted in First Year of a Silken Reign, p. 150.

II. intrans. To move with a quick, sweeping motion; move nimbly and swiftly: as, to whisk away.

Then, ill bested of counsel, rageth she [the Queen],
And whisketh through the town. Surrey, Anecd., IV.

I wish you would one day whisk over and look at Harley House. Walpole, Letters, II. 44.

whisk2 (hwisk), n. [*< whisk*1, v., referring, in the orig. form of the game called "whisk and swabbers," to the rapid action and the whisking or sweeping of the cards from the table as the tricks were won. There are various other card terms having reference to quick, sweeping action: e. g., 'sweep the stakes,' 'slams, etc. The name whisk, having no very obvious significance after its first application, came to be called whist. See *whist*2.] The game of whist.

He plays at whisk and smokes his pipe eight-and-forty hours together sometimes.
Farquhar, Beaux' Stratagem, I. 1.

He played at whisk till one in the morning.
Walpole, Letters, II. 417.

Whisk and swabbers. See swabber.

whisker (hwis'kér), n. [Formerly also (Sc.) whisker, whiscar; *< whisk*1 + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which whisks, or moves with a quick, sweeping motion.—2. A switch or rod. [Old slang.]

A whip is a whisker that will wreat out blood
Of back and of body, beaten right well.
Harnan, Caveat for Cursetors, p. 122.

3. A bunch of feathers for sweeping anything.
Jamieson.—4. In zoöl.: (a) One of the long, stiff, bristly hairs which grow on the upper lip of the cat and many other animals; a vibrissa;
a feeler; also, the set of such hairs on either side of the mouth. See vibrissa, and cuts under Platyrrhynchus and tiger. (b) pl. Any similar formation of hairs, feathers, etc., about an animal's mouth; also, color-marks suggestive of whiskers, as myriacal or maxillary stripes.
See whiskered. (c) In entom., a long fringe of hairs on the clypeus, overhanging the mouth, as in flies of the genus Asilus.—5. The hair of the face, especially that on the sides of the face or cheeks of a man, as distinguished from that which grows on the upper lip (called the mustache) and that on the chin (called the beard), but the word was formerly also used for the hair on the upper lip: commonly in the plural. Compare side-whiskers.

His face not very great, ample forehead, yellowish reddish whiskers, which naturally turned up; below he was shaved close, except a little tip under his lip.

Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Hobbes).

His whiskers curled, and shoe-strings tied,
A new Toledo by his side. Addison, Rosamond, II. 2.

He had a beard too, and whiskers turned upwards on his upper-lip, as long as Baudron's. Scott, Antiquary, IX.

The Czar's look, I own, was much brighter and braker,
But then he is sadly deficient in whisker.
Byron, Fragment of Epistle to Thomas Moore.

6. In ships, an outrigger of wood or iron extending laterally from each side of the bowsprit-cap, serving to support the jib and flying-jib guys.—
7. Something great or extraordinary; a whopper; a big lie. Plantus made English (1694),
p. 9. (Davies).—8. A blusterer. [Scotch.]

March whisker was never a good fisher.
Scotch proverb (Ray, Proverbs (1678), p. 386).

whiskerando (hwis-ke-ran'do), n. [So called in allusion to Don Ferolo Whiskerando, a burlesque character in Sheridan's play, "The Critic": a name formed, with a Spanish-looking termination, < whisker.] A whiskered or bearded person. [Burlesque.]

The dumpy, elderly, square-shouldered, squinting, carrotty whiskerando of a warrior who was laying about him so savagely.
Thackeray, Philip, xiii.

whiskerando† (hwis-ke-ran'dod), a. [As whiskerando + *-ed*2.] Whiskered.

To what follies and what extravagances would the whiskerando uncarotenes of Bond Street and St. James's proceed, if the beard once more were, instead of the neck-cloth, to "make the man"! Southey, The Doctor, cxi.

whiskered (hwis'kér'd), a. [< whisker + *-ed*2.]
1. Wearing whiskers; having whiskers, in any sense.

The whisker'd vermin race. Grainger, Sugar-Cane, II.
Again the whiskered Spaniard all the land with terror smute. Longfellow, Belfry of Bruges.

2. Formed into whiskers.

Preferring sense from chin that's bare
To nonsense thrond in whisker'd hair.

M. Green, The Spleen.

Black-whiskered greenlet or vireo. See vireo and whip-tong-telly.—Whiskered auk or auklet, Stomorhynchus pygmaeus, a small auk found in the North Pacific, of a dark color, having long white feathers like whiskers on each side of the head. It closely resembles the bird figured at auklet.—Whiskered bat, Vesperugo mystacinus, a small brown bat widely distributed in Europe and Asia.—Whiskered tern. See tern 1.

whiskery (hwis'kér-i), a. [< whisker + -y]. Having or wearing whiskers. [Humorous.]

The old lady is as ugly as any woman in the parish, and as tall and whiskery as a Grenadier.

Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xlii.

whisket (hwis'ket), n. [Also wisket; < whisk + -et]. 1. A basket; especially, a straw basket in which provender is given to cattle. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A small lathe for turning wooden pins. It has a hollow chuck to hold the pin while being turned. E. H. Knight.

whiskey, whiskeyed. See whisky, whiskified.
whiskified, whiskeyed (hwis'ki-fid), a. [< whisky + -fy + -ed]. Intoxicated, or partly intoxicated, as with whisky. [Humorous.]

The two whiskeyed gentlemen are up with her.

Thackeray, Virginians, xxxviii.

This person was a sort of whiskified Old Mortality, who claimed to have cut all manner of tombstones standing around.

W. Black, Phaeton, xxviii. (Davies.)

whiskin (hwis'kin), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. A kind of drinking-vessel.

And wee will han a whiskin at every rush-bearing; a wassel cup at yule; a seed-cake at fastens.

The Two Lancashire Lovers (1840), p. 19. (Halliwell.)

The whisking winds.

Purchas.

2. Great; large. Bailey, 1731. [Prov. Eng.]
whisky¹, whiskey¹ (hwis'ki), n. [< whisk + -y], because it whisks along rapidly.] A kind of light gig or one-horse chaise. Sometimes called tim-whisky.

Whiskies and gigs and curricles. Crabbe, Works, II. 174.

The increased taxation of the curriole had the effect of bringing into existence the less expensive gig, a development or imitation of a class of two-wheeled carriage known in the country as a whisky.

S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 227.

whisky², whiskey² (hwis'ki), n. [Also Se. whiskey; prob. short for whiskybhang* or some similar form, var. of usquebaugh, < Gael. and Ir. usquebeatha, whisky, lit. (like F. eau de vie, brandy) 'water of life', < usque, water, + beatha, life (cf. L. vita, life, Gr. bios, life). It does not seem probable that E. whisky was taken from Gael. Ir. usque simply.] An ardent spirit, distilled chiefly from grain. The term was originally applied to the spirit obtained from malt in Ireland, Scotland, etc., in which sense whisky is synonymous with usquebaugh. Irish whisky and Scotch whisky are still made from malt, and are known by numerous names, as poten, mountain-dew, etc. In the United States whisky is commonly made either from Indian corn (corn whisky) or from rye (rye whisky). The name wheat whisky has, however, been appropriated to certain brands, and wheat is probably used in the making of many different kinds or qualities.—Whisky cocktail, a cocktail in which whisky is the principal ingredient: it consists of whisky and water flavored with bitters, usually also with the peel of orange or lemon, and sweetened with sugar.—Whisky Insurrection or Rebellion. See insurrection.—Whisky ring, a combination of United States revenue officers and distillers to defraud the government of a part of the internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits. It was formed in St. Louis about 1875, extended to other western cities, and secretly acquired great influence in the government, but was broken up in 1875.—Whisky smash, a beverage of which the principal ingredient is whisky flavored with mint which is bruised or smashed in the liquor, and usually also with orange, lemon, pineapple, or other fruit; a whisky sour with the addition of mint.—Whisky sour, a beverage consisting chiefly of whisky and water, acidulated with lemon-juice.—Whisky toddy, toddy of which whisky is the principal ingredient; a beverage consisting of hot water and whisky, sweetened or spiced.

whisky-frisky (hwis'ki-fris'ki), a. Flighty. [Colloq.]

As to talking in such a whisky-frisky manner that nobody can understand him, why it's tantamount to not talking at all.

Miss Burney, Cecilia, ix. 3.

whisky-jack (hwis'ki-jak), n. [An altered form, by substitution of the familiar Jack for John, of whisky-john.] The gray jay common in northern sections and western mountainous parts of North America; the Canada jay, Perisoreus canadensis, related to P. infansus of northern Europe; the moose-bird. See cut under Perisoreus.

The Canada Jay, or Whisky-Jack (the corruption probably of a Cree name). Encyc. Brit., XIII. 611.

whisky-john (hwis'ki-jon), n. [A corruption of the Cree Ind. name, rendered whiskas-shawnoesh by Sir John Richardson, but commonly spelled wiskachon, < Cree Ind. wiss-ka-tjan. Cf. whisky-jack.] Same as whisky-jack.

whisky-liver (hwis'ki-liv'er), n. Cirrhosis of the liver, resulting from chronic alcohol-poisoning.

whisp (hwisp), n. An erroneous form of wisp, 4 (like the erroneous form, now established, whisk for wisk).

whisper (hwis'pér), v. [< ME. whisperen, whisperen, whisperen, whisperen, whisper, < AS. (ONorth.) hwisprian, whisper, murmur, = MD. wisperen, D. wispolen, whisper, = OHG. wispalon, wispalon, MHG. G. wispen, whisper; cf. recent G. wispern, whisper; allied to Ital. hwisra = Sw. hwisra = Dan. hviske, whisper; imitative words, like whister, whistle, AS. hwestian and hwæstri-an, whistle, ult. from the sibilant base hwis-. Cf. whistle.] I. intrans. 1. To speak without uttering voice or sonant breath; speak with a low, rustling voice; speak softly or under the breath; converse in whispers: often implying plotting, evil-speaking, and the like.

I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Shak., All's Well, iv. 8. 323.

When David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead.

2 Sam. xii. 19.

All that hate me whisper together against me. Ps. xli. 7.

The hawthorn-bush, with seats beneath the shade—
For talking ago and whispering lovers made!

Goldsmith, Des. VII., i. 14.

Alas! they had been friends in youth;
But whispering tongues can poison truth.

Coleridge, Christabel, II.

2. To make a low, rustling sound, like that of a whisper.

Soft zephyrs whispering through the trees.

Thomson, Country Life.

The trees began to whisper, and the wind began to roll.

Tennyson, May Queen, Conclusion.

Smooth as our Charles [River], when, fearing lest he wrong
The new moon's mirrored skiff, he slides along,
Full without noise, and whispers in his reeds.

Lovell, To H. W. L. on his Birthday.

Whispered bronchophony, bronchophony elicited by the whispering of the patient.

II. trans. 1. To utter in a low non-vocal tone; say under the breath; state or communicate in whispers: often implying plotting, slanderous talk, etc.

She whispers in his ears a heavy tale.

Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1125.

Fresh gales and gentle airs

Whisper'd it to the woods.

Milton, P. L., viii. 516.

I know that's a Secret, for it's whisper'd every where.

Congreve, Love for Love, III. 8.

2. To address or inform in a whisper or low voice, especially with the view of avoiding publicity: elliptical for whisper to.

He did first whisper the man in the ear, that such a man should think of such a card.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 946.

He came

To whisper Wolsey.

Shak., Hen. VIII., i. 1. 179.

You saw her whisper me erewhile.

B. Jonson, Epicoene, iv. 2.

He whisper'd the bonnie lassie herself,

And has her favour won.

Katharine Janfari (Child's Ballads, IV. 30).

At the same time he whispered me in the ear to take notice of a tabby cat that sat in the chimney corner.

Addison, Spectator, No. 117.

whisper (hwis'pér), n. [< whisper, v.] 1. The utterance of words with the breath not made vocal; a low, soft, rustling voice.

The seaman's whistle

Is as a whisper in the ears of death.

Shak., Pericles, III. 1. 9.

The inward voice or whisper can never give a tone.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 174.

2. A whispered word, remark, or conversation.

Full well the busy whisper, circling round,

Convey'd the dismal tidings when he frown'd.

Goldsmith, Des. VII., i. 203.

Upon his first rising the court was hushed, and a general whisper ran among the country people that Sir Roger was up.

Addison, Spectator, No. 122.

No sound broke the stillness of the night save now and then low whispers from the men, who were standing motionless in the ranks.

Cornhill Mag., Oct., 1888, p. 384.

3. A secret hint, suggestion, or insinuation.

At least, the whisper goes so. Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 80.

Though they be sometime subject to loose whispers,
Yet wear they two-edg'd swords for open censures.

Fletcher, Valentinian, III. 1.

I heard many whispers against the other, as a whimsical sort of a fellow.

Steele, Tatler, No. 48.

4. A low, rustling sound of whispering, or a similar sound, as of the wind.

In whispers like the whispers of the leaves

That tremble round a nightingale.

Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

5. Specifically, in med., the sound of the whispering voice transmitted to the ear of the auscultator placed against the chest-wall.—Cavernous whisper. See cavernous.—Pig's whisper. See pig 1.

whisperer (hwis'pér-ér), n. [< whisper + -er].

1. One who whispers, or speaks in a low, soft, rustling voice, or under the breath.—2. One who tells secrets, or makes secret and mischievous communications; a talebearer; an informer.

A whisperer separateth chief friends.

Prov. xvi. 28.

Whisperers, backbiters, haters of God.

Rom. i. 29.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers than good magistrates and officers.

Bacon, Deformity (ed. 1887).

They are directly under the conduct of their whisperer, and think they are in a state of freedom while they can prate with one of these attendants of all men in general, and still avoid the man they most like.

Steele, Spectator, No. 118.

whisperhood (hwis'pér-hüd), n. [< whisper + -hood]. The state of being a whisper; the initial condition of a rumor—that is, a mere whisper or insinuation. [Rare.]

I know a life that now disturbs half the kingdom with its noise, which, although too proud and great at present to own its parents, I can remember its whisperhood.

Swift, Examiner, No. 14.

whispering (hwis'pér-ing), n. [Verbal n. of whisper, v.] 1. Whispered talk or conversation; a whisper, or whispers collectively.

There was nothing but private meetings and whisperings amongst them, they feeding themselves & others with what they should bring to pass in England.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 178.

Even the whisperings ceased, and nothing broke the stillness but the plashing of the waves without.

E. L. Bynner, Begum's Daughter, xxii.

2. Talebearing, hint, or insinuation.

Least there be . . . whisperings.

2 Cor. xii. 20.

Foul whisperings are abroad.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 1. 79.

whispering (hwis'pér-ing), p. a. [Ppr. of whisper, v.] 1. Like a whisper; low and non-vocal.

The passing of all these hundreds of naked feet makes a great whispering sound over the burning pavements.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 224.

2. Emitting, making, or characterized by a low sound resembling a whisper.

The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whispering wind.

Goldsmith, Des. VII., i. 121.

To Rosy Brook, to cut long whispering reeds which grew there, to make pan-pipes of.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 3.

I waded and floundered a couple of miles through the whispering night.

Lovell, Study Windows, p. 40.

whispering-gallery (hwis'pér-ing-gal'g-ri), n. See gallery.

whisperingly (hwis'pér-ing-li), adv. In a whispering manner; in a low voice.

The pool in the corner where the grasses were dank and trees leaned whisperingly.

George Eliot, Middlemarch, xii.

whisperously (hwis'pér-us-li), adv. [*< whisperous (< whisper + -ous) + -ly]. In a whisper; whisperingly. [Rare.]

The Duchess in awe of Carr Vipont sinks her voice, and gabbles on whisperously.

Bulwer, What will he do with it? v. 8.

whist (hwist), interj. [< ME. whist! hush! cf. whisht, hist!, hush!, etc. These are all variations of the utterance st, consisting of a sibilant or low hiss stopped abruptly by the stop-consonant t. This utterance is especially suited to call the attention of one near, and by the lowness of the sound to suggest silence. Cf. whisper, whistle.] Silence! hush! be still!

whist (hwist), a. [Also whisk; < whist, interj.] Hushed; silent; mute; still: chiefly used predicatively.

When all were whist, King Edward thus bespake.

Peele, Honour of the Garter.

Far from the town (where all is whist and still).

Marlowe, Hero and Leander, i.

The winds, with wonder whist,

Smoothly the waters kist.

Milton, Nativity, i. 64.

whist (hwist), v. [< whist, a. Cf. hist!, hush!, etc.] I. trans. To silence; still.

So was the Titaness put downe and whist.

Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 56.

II. intrans. To become silent.

In silence then, yehowding him from sight,
But days twice five he whistled; and refused,
To death, by speech to further any wight.

Surrey, Æneid, II.

Th' other nipt so nile
That whist I could not.

Mir. for Mage, p. 427.

whist² (hwist), n. [A later form of *whisk*². The change from *whisk*², a word of no very obvious significance after its first application, was prob. orig. accidental, or due to an unthinking conformity to *whist*¹. The notion that the game was called whist "because the parties playing have to be whist or silent," etymologically improbable in itself, is based on the erroneous assumption that whist is the orig. name. The rule of silence, so far as it exists, is appar. founded, however, in part on the false etymology.] A game played with cards by four persons, two of them as partners in opposition to the other two, also partners. Partnership is determined by agreement or by cutting: if by agreement, two players, one on each side, cut for deal; if by cutting, the two who cut the lowest cards are partners, and the original deal belongs to the player who cuts the lowest card. The ace is the lowest card in cutting. Previous to play, the cards (a full pack) are shuffled. The player on the right of the dealer cuts, and the dealer, beginning with the player on his left, distributes in regular order to all the players, one at a time, the cards face downward, except the last card, which he turns face upward upon the table, at his right hand, where it must remain until his turn to play. This is the trump card, and the suit to which it belongs is the trump suit; the other three suits are plain suits. The leader is the dealer's left-hand player, who begins the play by throwing one of his thirteen cards face upward upon the center of the table. Second hand, the leader's left-hand player, follows with a card of the same suit if he holds one; if he does not hold one, with a card of a plain suit (a discard) or with a trump; third and fourth hands similarly follow; and the highest card or the highest trump played takes the trick. The trick is gathered by the partner of the winner; the four cards are made by him into a packet, and placed face downward, at his left hand, on the table. The winner becomes the leader, and the routine is continued until all the cards held are played. Tricks above six in number count a point each upon the score. The score is the record kept of the number of points made. In play the ace is highest, the king, queen, knave, 10, and 9 are also high cards, the 8 is the middle card, and the 7 to the 2 inclusive are low cards. The rank of the cards is in the above order: the queen will take the knave, the 6 will take the 5. The ace, king, queen, and knave of the trump suit are the honors. Any trump will take any plain-suit card. The usual practice is to play with two packs of cards, one of these being shuffled or "made up" by the partner of the dealer during the deal, and afterward placed by him on the left hand of the next dealer. The dealer has the privilege of shuffling before the cards are out. The play is conducted with reference to combinations of cards held. By the system used the cards are made conversational. In English or short whist the table is complete with six candidates. When a rubber has been played by four of these (elected by cutting), the other two have right of entry. The game is of five points made by tricks and by honors as counted. Four honors held by a player, or in conjunction with his partner, count four points; three honors similarly held count two points. The winners of a game score a point (a single) if the adversaries have three or four points up; two points (a double) against one or two points up; and three points (a treble) against no score. A rubber (two games won in succession, or two won out of three) is always played. Two points for the rubber are added to the score of the rubber-winners. When three games are played, the value of the opponents' score is deducted from the winners' total. Exposed cards (cards seen when they should not be played) must be left face upward on the table, liable to an adversary's call; a card led out of turn may be called, or, instead, a card of another suit; cards played upon a trick may by any player be ordered to be placed before their respective players; a player may ask his partner if he holds a card of a suit in which he renounces; and any player may demand to see the last trick that has been turned. In American or standard whist four players form a table. These may agree upon or cut for partners. The game is of seven points, made of tricks and penalties. Credit for all points made by both sides is given, the winner of a rubber scoring the entire number of points made against the entire number made by the opponents. Cards are not called, a trick turned cannot be shown, honors are not counted, and conversation during play is not permitted. Penalties for speaking or demonstration, exposure of cards, or leading out of turn, and for revoking are payable in points after the last card of a hand is played and before the cards are out for the next deal.

I affirm against Aristotle that cold and rain congregate homogenes, for they gather together you and your crew, at whist, punch, and claret.

Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, Jan. 25, 1725.

Whist is a language, and every card played an intelligible sentence.

James Clay.

At Whist there is a constant endeavor on the part of one side to arrive at the maximum result for their hands by the use of observation, memory, inference, and judgment, their play being dependent from trick to trick on the inferred position of the unknown from observation of the known.

Cavendish, Card Essays, p. 6.

American Whist is recreative work, enjoyable labor, paradoxical as that may seem; its riddle is fascination; its practice is intelligent employment; its play is mathematical induction; its result is intellectual gain.

Double-dummy whist. See double dummy, under dummy.—Dummy whist. See dummy, 5.—Duplicate whist, a modification of the game of whist in which by an arrangement of boards, indicators, and counters hands are preserved after having been once played, enabling them to be replayed by the opposing partners.—Fancy whist, any form of play that introduces unauthorized methods.—Five-point whist, a game without counting honors, usually played under such short-whist laws as may be applied to it.—Long whist, a game of ten points with honors counting. This was the game of the eighteenth century, played at the English clubs until that of five points with honors counting, called by Clay short whist, was introduced.

In the author's opinion long whist (ten up) is a far finer game than short whist (five up). Short whist, however, has taken such a hold that there is no chance of our reverting to the former game. Cavendish, On Whist, p. 61.

Mongrel whist, a game played in accordance with laws or regulations selected from the two authorized methods. whistert (hwis'ter), v. t. [A var. of whisper, simulating *whist*¹.] To whisper; recite in a low voice.

Whistle then to me, As signal that thou hear'st something approach. Shak., II. and J. v. 3. 7.

2. To emit a warbling or sharp, chirping sound or song, as a bird.

Latin was no more difficile Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. S. Butler, Hudibras, I. f. 54.

Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft The rubreast whistles from a garden-croft, And gathering swallows twitter in the skies. Keats, To Autumn.

3. To sound shrill or sharp; move or rush with shrill or whizzing sound.

The southern wind Doth play the trumpet to his purposes, And by his hollow whistling in the leaves Foretells a tempest and a blustering day. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 5.

A bullet whistled o'er his head. Byron, The Giaour.

4. To sound a whistle or similar wind- or steam-instrument: as, locomotives whistle at crossings.—5. To give information by whistling; hence, to become informer.

I kept aye between him and her, for fear she had whistled. Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiii.

To go whistle, a milder expression for to go to the deuce, or to the lile.

This being done, let the law go whistle. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 715.

Your fame is secure; bid the critics go whistle. Shenstone, The Poet and the Dun.

To whistle down the wind, to talk to no purpose; hold an idle or futile argument.—To whistle for, to summon by whistling. To whistle for a wind, a superstitious practice among old seamen of whistling during a calm to obtain a breeze. Such men will not whistle during a storm.

"Do you not desire to be free?" "Desire! ay, that I do; but I may whistle for that wind long enough before it will blow." Johnston, Chrysal, II. 184. (Davies.)

Whistling coot, the American black scoter, (Idemia americana [Connecticut.]) See cut under Idemia.—Whistling dick, (a) Same as whistling thrush. II. trans. 1. To form, utter, or modulate by whistling: as, to whistle a tune or air.

Tunes . . . that he heard the carmen whistle. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 2. 342.

I might as well . . . have whistled figs to a mile-stone. W. Collins, Moonstone, xxi.

2. To call, direct, or signal by or as by a whistle.

He cast off his friends, as a huntsman his pack, For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back. Goldsmith, Retaliation.

The first blue-bird of spring whistled them back to the woods. Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

3. To send with a whistling sound.

The Spaniards, who lay as yet at a good distance from them behind the bushes, as secure of their prey, began to whistle now and then a shot among them. Dampier, Voyages, I. 117.

To whistle off, to send off by a whistle; send from the fist in pursuit of prey: a term in falconry; hence, to dismiss or send away generally; turn loose. Nares remarks, on the quotation from Shakespeare, that the hawk seems to have been usually cast off in this way against the wind when sent in pursuit of prey; with it, or down the wind, when turned loose or abandoned.

If I do prove her haggard, Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings, I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind, To prey at fortune. Shak., Othello, III. 3. 262.

This is he, Left to fill up your triumph; he that basely Whistled his honour off to the wind. Fletcher, Bonduca, IV. 3.

whistle (hwis'l), n. [Cf. ME. whistle, whistol, whystyl, wistle, < AS. hwistle, a whistle, a pipe: see whistle, v.] 1. A more or less piercing or sharp sound produced by forcing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips: as, the merry whistle of a boy.—2. Any similar sound. Especially—(a) The shrill note of a bird.

The great plover's human whistle. Tennyson, Geraldine.

(b) A sound of this kind produced on an instrument, especially one of the instruments called whistles. See def. 3.

Ship-boys . . . Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give. Shak., Hen. V., III. Prolog.

Sooner the whistle of a mariner Shall sleeke the rough curbs of the ocean back. Marton, What You Will, v. 1.

(c) A sound made by the wind blowing through branches of trees, the rigging of a vessel, etc., or by a flying missile.

(d) A call or signal made by whistling.

Such a high calling therefore as this sends not for those drossy spirits that need the lure and whistle of earthly preform, like those animals that fetch and carry for a morsell. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

They [of Selo] have now no domestic partridges that come at a whistle, but great plenty of wild ones of the red sort. Pococke, Description of the East, II. II. 9.

3. An instrument or apparatus for producing a whistling sound. Whistles are of various shapes and sizes, but they all utilize the principle of the direct flute or flageolet—that of a stream of air so directed through a tube as to impinge on a sharp edge.

With quintils, & qweas, & other quaint gere, Melody of mowthe myrtho for to here. Destruction of Troy (E. K. T. S.), I. 6061.

A whistle seems to have been a badge of high command in the navy in the sixteenth century. One is mentioned in the will of Sir Edward Howard (1612) as hung from a rich chain. Fairholt.

Specifically—(a) The small pipe used in signaling, etc.,

Boatswain's Whistle

by boatswains, huntsmen, policemen, etc. (b) A small tin or wooden tube, fitted with a mouthpiece and pierced generally with six holes, used as a musical toy. Often called a perny whistle. See flageolet. (c) An instrument sounded by escaping steam, used for giving signals, alarms, etc., on railway-engines, steamships, etc. See cuts under steam-whistle and passenger-engine.—At one's whistle, at one's call.

Ready at his whistle to array themselves round him in arms against the commander in chief. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xiii.

Galton's whistle, an instrument for testing the power to hear shrill notes.—To pay for one's whistle, or to pay dear for one's whistle, to pay a high price for something one fancies; pay dearly for indulging one's whim, caprice, fancy, or the like. The allusion is to the story Benjamin Franklin tells (Works, ed. 1836, II. 182) of his setting his mind upon a common whistle and buying it for four times its real value.

If a man likes to do it, he must pay for his whistle.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxxv. (Davies.)

To wet one's whistle, to take a drink of liquor, perhaps with reference to the wetting of a wooden whistle to improve the tone, perhaps merely in comparison of the throat and vocal organs with a musical instrument. Sometimes, erroneously, to wet one's whistle. [Colloquial and jocose.]

As any jay she light was and jolyt,
So was his joly whistle wel ywet.

Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 235.

I wete my whystell, as good drinkers do. Je croque la pie. Wylt thou wete your whystell?
Palafrave, p. 780.

Worth the whistle, worth the trouble or pains of calling for.

I have been worth the whistle. Shak., Lear, iv. 2. 29.

whistle-belly (hwis'l-bel'i), n. That causes rumbling or whistling in the belly. [Slang.]

"I thought you wouldn't appreciate the widow's tap," said East, watching him with a grin. "Regular whistle-belly vengeance, and no mistake!"
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. xviii.

whistle-cup (hwis'l-kup), n. A drinking-cup having a whistle appended, awarded, as a prize in a drinking-bout, to the last person able to blow it.

whistle-drunk (hwis'l-drunk), a. Too drunk to whistle; very drunk. [Slang.]

He was indeed, according to the vulgar phrase, whistle-drunk; for, before he had swallowed the third bottle he became so entirely overpowered that, though he was not carried off to bed till long after, the parson considered him as absent.
Fielding, Tom Jones, xii. 2. (Davies.)

whistle-duck (hwis'l-duk), n. 1. Same as whistler, 1 (c).—2. Same as whistling.

whistle-fish (hwis'l-fish), n. A rockling; specifically, the three-bearded rockling; same as sea-loach. Also weasel-fish.

I believe . . . that, while preserving the sound of the name, the term has been changed, and a very different word substituted, and that for whistle-fish we ought to read weasel-fish. Both the Three and Five-bearded Rocklings were called mustela from the days of Pliny to those of Rondelet, and thence to the present time.
Farrell, British Fishes, II. 272.

whistler (hwis'l-er), n. [ME. whistlere, whistlere, < AS. hwiistlere, a whistler, piper, < hwiistlian, whistle: see whistle.] 1. One who or that which whistles.

(d) The ring-ousel, Merula torquax. See cut under ousel, 2. [Local, Eng.] (e) The green plover or lapwing; the pewit.

The screech-owl, and the whistler shrill. Webster.

2. A broken-winded horse; a roarer.

The latter of whom is spoken of as a non-stayer and a whistler.
The Field, Aug. 27, 1887. (Encyc. Diet.)

3†. A piper; one who plays on the pipes. Piers Plowman (B), xv. 475.—4. The keeper of a shebeen, or unlicensed spirit-shop. [Slang.]

The turnkeys know beforehand, and gives the word to the whistlers, and you may wistle for it wen you go to look.
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistling (hwis'l-ing), p. a. Sounding like a whistle; as, a whistling sound.

whistling-arrow (hwis'l-ing-ar'6), n. An arrow whose head was so formed that the air rushing through it in its flight produced a whistling sound: a toy in use in the sixteenth century.

whistling-buoy (hwis'ling-boi), n. See buoy, 1 (with cut).

whistlingly (hwis'ling-li), adv. In a whistling manner; with a sibilant or shrill sound. Storm-month.

whistling-shop (hwis'ling-shop), n. A spirit-shop, especially a secret and illicit one. In the quotation, the place referred to is a room in a prison for debtors where spirits are sold secretly. [Slang.]

"Bless your heart, no, sir," replied Job; "a whistling-shop, sir, is where they sell spirits."
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistly† (hwist'li), adv. [whistl + -ly 2. Cf. whistly.] Silently.

whist-play (hwist'plā), n. Play in the game of whist.

The fact is that all rules of whist-play depend upon and are referable to general principles.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 544.

whist-player (hwist'plā'er), n. One who plays whist.

About 1830 some of the best French whist-players, with Deschappelles at their head, modified and improved the old-fashioned system.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 544.

whit¹ (hwit), n. [*A var. of wit, a var. of wight, < ME. wigt, wihit, sometimes whit, < AS. wihit: see wigh.] The change of initial w to wh is perhaps due in this case to emphasis (so want is sometimes pronounced emphatically whont). The notion that whit is derived by metathesis from AS. wihit is erroneous.] The smallest part, particle, bit, or degree; a little; a jot, tittle, or iota: often used adverbially, and generally with a negative.

A mercurious case, that Ientlemen should so be ashamed of good learning, and never a whit ashamed of ill manners.
Aesop, The Scholemaster, p. 60.

Nor is the freedom of the will of God any whit abated, let, or hindered.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, l. 2.

And Samuel told him every whit. 1 Sam. iii. 18.

Are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day? John vii. 23.

But all your threats I do not fear,
Nor yet regard one whit.
The Cruel Black (Child's Ballads, III. 376).

Why, man, you don't seem one whit the happier at this.
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 3.

[Eng.]—White wren, yam, etc. See the nouns.—Syn. 2. White, Fair, Blond, Clear. As to complexion, white expresses that which has too little color for naturalness or health; that is fair which agreeably approaches white; that is clear which is free from blotch; there is a clear brown or olive as well as a clear blond. Blond is fair in distinctive application to the color of the human skin—properly to that of females.

II. n. [ME. hwite, the white, whiteness, fairness; cf. OHG. weiz, leel, hwiti.] 1. A highly luminous color, devoid of chroma, and therefore indeterminate in hue. But a white intensely illuminated has a yellow effect, and very deeply shaded takes on the bluish look of gray. A derangement of the proportions of light in pure white to the extent of 3 per cent. of the red, 6 per cent. of the green, or 5 per cent. of the blue, is readily perceived by direct comparison; but quite considerable admixtures of chroma are compatible with the color's retaining the name of white.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white

Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 4. 72.

2. A pigment of this color.—3. Something, or a part of something, having the color of snow. Specifically.—(a) The central part in the butt in archery, which was formerly painted white; the center or mark at which an arrow or other missile is aimed; hence, the thing or point aimed at.

II. trans. To make white. Specifically—(a) To whiten; whitewash; hence, to gloss over.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mark ix. 3.

Then bring't at his virtue asleep, and stay't at the wheel Both of his reason and judgment, that they move not; Whitt' over all his vices.

Fletcher (and others), Bloody Brother, iv. 1. He was as scrupulously whited as any sepulchre in the whole bills of mortality. Thackeray, Newcomes, viii.

(b) To make pale or pallid.

Your passion hath sufficiently whited your face.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 3.

—Syn. See whiten. white² (hwit'), v. t. A dialectal form of thwite. Compare whittle² from thwittle*.

white-alloy (hwit'a-loi'), n. One of various cheap alloys used to imitate silver. Most of them contain copper and tin, with some arsenic.

white-armed (hwit'ärmd), a. Having white arms.—White-armed sea-anemone, an actinia, Sargatia leucolæma.

white-arise (hwit'ärs), n. The wheatear.

whiteback (hwit'bäk), n. 1. The canvasback duck. See cut under canvasback. Alex. Wilson, 1814. [Potomac river, U. S.]—2. The white poplar, Populus alba. [Prov. Eng.]

white-backed (hwit'bäkt), a. Having the back more or less white.—White-backed bushbuck. See bushbuck.—White-backed colts, the South African Colius capensis, marked with a black-and-white line on each side of the back. It is small-bodied, but a foot or more long owing to the development of the tail.—White-backed skunk, the conepate. See cut under Conepatus.—White-backed woodpecker, a three-toed woodpecker of North America, Picoides dorsalis of Baird, having a long white stripe down the middle of the black back.

whitebait (hwit'bät), n. 1. A small clupeoid fish, prized as a delicacy in England. Whitebait are best when from 2 or 3 inches long, but retain the name up to a size of 4 or 5 inches. They abound in the estuary of the Thames and in other similar British localities at certain seasons. The fishing begins in April, and lasts through the summer; the fishes are taken in bag-nets. They are chiefly of a silvery-white color inclining to a pale-greenish on the back. Some places in England, as especially Greenwich, are famous for their whitebait dinners. The fish are usually fried till they are crisp. The identity of whitebait has been much discussed and disputed. They have been supposed to be a distinct species, named Clupea alba, and even placed in a genus framed for their reception as Rogentia alba. They have been more generally recognized as the fry of certain clupeoids, as the sprat (Clupea sprattus), the herring (C. harengus), and the shad (of one or another of the British species). But careful examinations of great quantities of whitebait, made in different localities at different times, have shown these opinions to be more or less erroneous. Whitebait consists in fact of the fry of several different clupeoid fishes, mainly the sprat and the herring, with occasionally a small percentage of yet other fishes; and the relative quantity of the different species represented varies, moreover, according to season and locality.

Our wives (without whose sanction no good man would surely ever look a whitebait in the face) gave us permission to attend this entertainment. Thackeray, Phillip, xi. 2. A Chinese salmonoid fish, Salanx sinensis. See Salanx.

white-baker (hwit'bä'kär), n. The beam-bird, Muscicapa grisola; the spotted flycatcher. Also whitewall, white-bird.

white-barred (hwit'bärd), a. Having one or more white bars, as an animal: specifying a British hawk-moth, Sesia sphegiformis or Trochilium sphegiforme.

white-bass (hwit'bäs), n. A fresh-water food-fish of the United States, Roccus chrysops, found chiefly in the Mississippi basin and the Great Lake region, of the same genus as the striped-bass (R. lineatus), which it much resembles, but quite different from the black-basses (which are centrarchoids). The color is silvery, tinged with yellow below, and marked along the sides with several blackish lines.

white-beaked (hwit'bēkt), a. Having a white beak. (a) White-billed, as a bird. (b) Having the snout or rostrum white, as a skunk-porpoise of the genus Lagenorhynchus (which see).

whitebeam, whitebeam-tree (hwit'bēm, -trē), n. A small Old World tree, Pyrus Aria, having the under side of its foliage, as well as the young twigs and inflorescence, clothed with silvery down. See beam-tree.

white-beard (hwit'bērd), n. [< ME. whyteberd; < white + beard.] A man having a white or gray beard; a graybeard; an old man.

And yf they wolle not dredde, ne obey that, then they shall be quyt by Blackberd or Whyteberd.

white-bird (hwit'bērd), n. Same as white-baker.

white-blaze (hwit'blāz), n. Same as white-face.

white-blow (hwit'blō), n. Either of two early flowers, Saxifraga tridactylites and Erophila vulgaris (Draba verna), both also named whitlow-grass: an old name in England.

white-bonnet (hwit'hon'et), n. A fictitious bidder at sales by auction: same as puffer, 2.

whitebottle (hwit'bot'l), n. The bladder-campion, Silene Cucubalus (S. inflata). See Silene.

whiteboy (hwit'boi), n. 1. An old term of endearment applied to a favorite son, dependent, or the like; a darling. See white¹, a., 5.

"I know," quoth I, "I am his white-boy, and will not be gulled."

Ford, Tis Pity, l. 4.

His first addressee was a humble Remonstrance by a dutiful son of the Church, almost as if he had said her white-boy.

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

2. [cap.] A member of an illegal agrarian association formed in Ireland about the year 1761, whose object was "to do justice to the poor by restoring the ancient commons and redressing other grievances" (Lecky). The members of the association assembled at night with white frocks over their other clothes (whence the name), threw down fences, and leveled inclosures (being hence also called levelers), destroyed the property of harsh landlords or their agents, the Protestant clergy, the tithe-collectors, and any others who had made themselves obnoxious to the association. Also used attributively.

Unlike ordinary crime, the White-boy outrages were systematically, skilfully, and often very successfully directed to the enforcement of certain rules of conduct.

Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

Whiteboyism (hwit'boi-izm), n. [< Whiteboy + -ism.] The principles or practices of the Whiteboys.

The Catholic bishop of Cloyne, in March, 1762, issued a pastoral urging those of his diocese to use all the spiritual censures at their disposal for the purpose of repressing Whiteboyism.

Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

white-brass (hwit'brās), n. An alloy of copper and zinc, in which the proportion of copper is comparatively small. With less than 45 per cent. of copper the color of brass ceases to be yellow, and as the percentage of zinc is increased the color of the alloy passes from silver-white to gray and bluish-gray. Such alloys are brittle, and have but a limited use. Some of these white-brasses are sold under the trade-names of "Birmingham platinum" and "platinum lead." These are chiefly used for buttons, which are made by first casting and then carefully pressing so as to bring out the ornamental pattern on the surface.

white-breasted (hwit'bres'ted), a. 1. Having a white breast or bosom.

White-breasted like a star

Fronting the dawn he moved. Tennyson, Enone.

2. Having the breast more or less white: specifying numerous animals. See cut under squirrel-hawk.

Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 207.

white-line (hwit'lin), a. White-lined.—White-line dart, a British noctuid moth, Agrotis tritici.

white-lined (hwit'lind), a. Having a white line or lines.—White-lined morning-sphinx, a common North American sphingid moth, Deilephila lineata. See sphinx (with cut).

white-lipped (hwit'lipt), a. Having white lips; having a white lip or aperture, as a shell.—White-lipped peccary, Dicotyles labiatus.—White-lipped snail, the common garden-snail, griled snail, or brown snail, Helix nemoralis (including H. hortensis and H. hybriata). Also called white-mouthed snail.

white-listed (hwit'lis'ted), a. Having white stripes or lists on a darker ground (the tree in the quotation having been torn with lightning).

He raised his eyes and saw

The tree that some white-listed thro' the gloom.

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

white-livered (hwit'liv'örd), a. Having, according to an old notion, a light-colored liver, supposed to be due to lack of bile or gall, and hence a pale look—an indication of cowardice; hence, cowardly.

For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not.

Shak., Hen. V., III. 2. 34.

As I live, they stay not here, white-liver'd wretches!

Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iv. 3.

When they come in swaggering company, and will pocket up anything, may they not properly be said to be white-livered?

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

whitely (hwit'li), a. [*white*¹ + -ly.] White; pale.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow.

Shak., L. L. L., III. 1. 198 (folio 1623).

Could I those whitely Stars go nigh

Which make the Milky-Way in sky.

Howell, Letters, II. 22 (song).

white-marked (hwit'märkt), a. Marked with white, as various animals.—White-marked moth, Taniocampa leucographa, a British noctuid.—White-marked tussock-moth, a common North American vaporor, Orygia leucostigma. See tussock-moth, and cut under Orygia, 2.

white-meat (hwit'mët), n. [ME. whitmete; < *white*¹ + meat.] See white meat, under *white*¹.

white-mouthed (hwit'moutht), a. In conch., white-lipped.

whiten (hwit'n), v. [ME. hwinen = leel. hwinna = Sw. hvitta = Dan. hvætte, whiten, become white; as *white*¹ + -en.] I. intrans. To become white; turn white; bleach: as, the sea whitens with foam.

Whiten gan the orisounthe sheene

Al esterward, as it is wont to done.

Chaucer, Troilus, v. 276.

Willows whiten, aspens quiver.

Tennyson, Lady of Shalott.

Poocke, Description of the East, II. II. 4.

The walls of Churches and rich Mens Houses are whitened with Lime, both within and without.

Dampier, Voyages, I. 140.

= Syn. Whiten, Bleach, Blanch, Flouate. Whiten may be a general word for making white, but is chiefly used for the putting of a white coating upon a surface: as, a wall whitened by the application of lime; the sea whitened by the wind. White for whiten is old-fashioned or Biblical. Bleach and blanch express the act of making white by removal, change, or destruction of color. Blanching is done chemically or by exposure to light and air: as, to bleach linen or bones. Blanching is a natural process: celery and other plants are blanched or flouated by excluding light from them; cheeks are blanched by fear, when the blood retires from their capillaries and leaves them pale. See also defs. 5 and 6 under blanch.

white-necked (hwit'nekt), a. Having a white neck: specifying various animals: as, the white-necked raven, Corvus cryptoleucus, a small raven found in western parts of the United States, having the concealed bases of the feathers of the neck fleecy-white; the white-necked or chaplain crow, Corvus scapularis; the white-necked otary, an Australian eared seal.

whitener (hwit'nér), n. [whiten + -er.] One who or that which bleaches, or makes white; especially, some chemical or other agent used for bleaching or cleaning very perfectly.

whiteness (hwit'nës), n. [ME. whitenesse, whitenesse; < *white*¹ + -ness.] 1. The state of being white; white color, or freedom from any darkness or obscurity on the surface.

Says Al Kithb, they [the Moors] displayed teeth of dazzling whiteness, and their breath was as the perfume of flowers.

Irving, Granada, i.

2. Lack of color in the face; paleness, as from sickness, terror, or grief; pallor.

Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek

Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., I. 1. 68.

3. Purity; cleanness; freedom from stain or blemish.

I am she,

And so will bear myself, whose truth and whiteness

Shall ever stand as far from these detections

As you from duty.

Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, I. 1.

He had kept

The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept.

Byron, Child Harold, III. 57.

whitening (hwit'ning), n. [Verbal n. of whiten, v.] 1. The act or process of making white.

—2. In leather-manuf., the operation of cleaning and preparing the flesh side of a hide on a beam, preparatory to waxing.—3. Tin-plating. See chemical plating, under plate, v. 4.—4. Same as *whiting*¹.

Three bright shillings. . . which Peggotty had evidently polished up with whitening.

Dickens, David Copperfield, v.

white-pot (hwit'pot), n. 1. A dish made of milk or cream, eggs, sugar, bread or rice, and sometimes fruit, spices, etc., baked in a pot or in a bowl placed in a quick oven. Older recipes differ as to the ingredients, but in its more frequent forms the dish is of the nature of a rice- or bread-pudding.

To make a white-pot. Take a pint and a half of cream, a quarter of a pound of sugar, a little rose-water, a few dates sliced, a few raisins of the sun, six or seven eggs, and a little mace, a sliced pipkin, or lemon, cut sipnet fashion for your dishes you bake in, and dip them in sack or rose-water.

When I show you the library, you shall see in her own hand . . . the best receipt now in England both for a hasty-pudding and a white-pot. Steele, Spectator, No. 109.

But white-pot thick is my Buxoma's fare.
While she loves white-pot, capon ne'er shall be,
Nor hare, nor beef, nor pudding, food for me.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Monday, 1. 92.

2†. A drink consisting of port wine heated, with a roasted lemon, sugar, and spices added. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 218.

white-pudding (hwit'püd'ing), n. 1. A pudding made of milk, eggs, flour, and butter.—2. A kind of sausage of oatmeal mixed with suet, seasoned with pepper, salt, and sometimes onions, and stuffed into a prepared intestine. Compare black-pudding.

white-rock (hwit'rok), n. In the South Staffordshire coal-field, dikes of diabasic rock which there intersect the coal-measures.

Microscopical examination shows that this white-rock or "white-trap" is merely an altered form of some diabase or basaltic rock, wherein the felspar crystals, though much decayed, can yet be traced, the augite, olivine, and magnetite being more or less completely changed into a mere pulverulent earthy substance.

Geikie, Text-Book of Geol., 2d ed., p. 580.

white-root (hwit'rüt), n. The Solomon's-seal, Polygonatum multiflorum, or perhaps P. officinale.

white-rot (hwit'rot), n. See rot.

whiterump (hwit'rump), n. 1. Same as white-tail, 1.—2. The Hudsonian godwit, Limosa hemastica: same as spotrump. G. Trumbull, 1888. [West Burnstable, Mass.]

white-rumped (hwit'rump), a. Having a white rump or white upper tail-coverts: specifying various birds.—White-rumped petrel, Leach's petrel, Cymochorea leucorhoa, of a fuliginous color with white upper tail-coverts: found on both east and west coasts of the United States.—White-rumped sandpiper, Bonaparte's sandpiper, Tringa or Actodromas bonapartei, having white upper tail-coverts: abundant in many parts of North America.—White-rumped shrike, the common American shrike, a variety of the loggerhead, Lanius ludovicianus excubitorides.—White-rumped thrush. See thrush.

white-salted (hwit'säl'ted), a. Cured in a certain manner, as herring (which see).—White-salted herring. See herring.

white-scoop (hwit'skop), n. Same as whitehead, 1. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Local, Connecticut.]

white-shafted (hwit'shaf'ted), a. Having white shafts or shaft-lines of the feathers: as, the white-shafted fantail, Rhipidura albiscapa. Compare red-shafted, yellow-shafted.

whiteside (hwit'sid), n. The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. [Westmoreland, Eng.]

white-sided (hwit'si'ded), a. Having the sides white, or having white on the sides: as, the white-sided dolphin, or skunk-porpoise. See cut under Lagenorhynchus.

whitesmith (hwit'smith), n. [white + smith. Cf. blacksmith.] 1. A worker in tinware.—2. A worker in iron who finishes or polishes the work, in distinction from one who forges it.

whitespot (hwit'spot), n. 1. A British noctuid moth, Dianthæcia albimaculata.—2. Another British moth, Ennychia octomaculata.

white-spotted (hwit'spot'ed), a. Spotted with white: as, the white-spotted pinion, Calymnia diffinis, a British noctuid; the white-spotted pug, Eupithecia albopunctata, a British geometrid moth.

whitespur (hwit'spér), n. In her., a title given to a certain class of esquires, from the spurs which they wore at their creation. Also called esquires' whitespurs.

whitester, whitater (hwit'stér, hwit'stér), n. [Early mod. E. whytstare, wyttare, whitstare, whitstare, whitstare; whitstare; whitstare + stare.] A bleacher; a whitener. [Obsolete or local.]

Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet-mead.

Shak., M. W. of W., III. 2. 14.

White's thrush. A ground-thrush, Geocichla (Dreocichla) varia. This bird was originally described as Turdus varius by Pallas, 1811; as T. aureus by Holandre, 1828; and as T. whitei by Eyton, 1836, when it was found as a straggler to Great Britain, and dedicated to G. White of Selborne; it is also known as Oreocichla aurea, O. whitei, and by other names. By some singular misapprehension White's thrush has been said to be "the only known bird which is found in Europe and America and Australia alike"—the facts being (1) that various birds are so found, but no thrushes of any kind are so found; (2) that White's thrush has never been found either in America or in Australia, and has been found in Europe as an accidental visitant only, its habitat being as given under ground-thrush (which see); (3) that the supposed White's thrush of Australia is G. lunulata (Turdus lunulatus of Latham), and the true White's thrush, occurring as a straggler in Europe, was mistakenly recorded as Turdus lunulatus by Blasius in 1862: whence a part of the myth, which in its rounded-out form extended to America.

whitestone (hwit'stön), n. A literal translation of the German Weissestein, the name of a rock now generally known as granulite, but sometimes called leptinite. The name Weissestein is now obsolete in Germany, and whitestone has very rarely been used by English writers on lithology.

whitetail (hwit'täl), n. [Formerly also whit-tail; white + tail. Cf. whiterump, wheatear.] 1. The wheat-ear or stonechat, Saxicola cinanthe. Also whiterump, white-arse, wittol, etc. See cut under wheatear.—2. A humming-bird of the genus Urochroa (which see, with cut).—3. The white-tailed deer of North America, Cariacus virginianus: in distinction from the blacktail (C. macrotis). See white-tailed deer (under white-tailed), and cut under Cariacus.

white-tailed (hwit'täld), a. Having the tail more or less completely white: noting various birds and other animals.—White-tailed buzzard, Buteo albocaudatus, a fine large hawk of Texas and southward, having the tail and its coverts white with broad black subterminal zone, and many fine zigzag blackish lines.—White-tailed deer, the common deer of North America, Cariacus virginianus; the whitetail. The tail is very long and broad, of a flattened lanceolate shape, and on the upper side concolor with the back; but it is pure-white underneath, and very conspicuous when hoisted in flight. See cut under Cariacus.—White-tailed eagle, Haliaeetus albicilla, the common sea-eagle or earn of Europe, etc.—White-tailed emerald, Eltoria chionura, a small humming-bird, 3½ inches long, chiefly green, but with the crissal and tail feathers white, the latter tipped with black. This species inhabits the United States of Colombia (Vergara) and Costa Rica. A second is E. cyaneiceps, little different. The feature named is unusual in this family. Compare Urochroa (with cut) and Urochroa.

—White-tailed gnu, Catoblepas gnu, the common gnu, in distinction from C. gorgon, whose tail is black. See cut under gnu.—White-tailed godwit, Limosa uropygia, a species widely distributed, closely resembling the bar-tailed godwit.—White-tailed kite, the black-shouldered kite of the United States, Elanus leucurus. See cut under kite.—White-tailed longspur, the black-shouldered or chestnut-collared longspur, Centropus ornatus, a very common fringilline bird of the western parts of North America.—White-tailed marlin. See marlin (b).—White-tailed mole, Talpa leucura, an Indian species.—White-tailed ptarmigan, Lagopus leucurus, a ptarmigan peculiar to the Rocky Mountain region of North America, in winter pure-white all over, including the tail, contrary to the rule in this genus. The nearest approach to this condition is found in L. hemileucurus of Spitzbergen.

white-thighed (hwit'thid), a. Having the femoral region white, or having white on the thighs: as, the white-thighed colobus, Colobus vellerosus, a semnopithecoid ape of Africa.

White-tailed Emerald (Eltoria chionura).

Common Whitethroat (Sylvia cinerea).

white-thorn (hwit'thorn), n. [ME. whythe thorne, whithorn; white + thorn.] See thorn, 1. whitethroat (hwit'thröt), n. 1. One of several small singing birds of the genus Sylvia, found in the British Islands. The common whitethroat is S. cinerea. The lesser whitethroat is S. curruca. The garden-whitethroat is S. hortensis, also called hilly whitethroat and greater petichape. See cut in preceding column.

2. The white-throated sparrow, or peabody-bird, of the United States, Zonotrichia albicollis.—3. A Brazilian humming-bird, Leucochloris albicollis. The character implied in the name is very unusual in this family.

white-throated (hwit'thrö'ted), a. Having a white throat: specifying many birds and other animals: as, the white-throated sparrow, Zonotrichia albicollis, the most abundant kind of crown-sparrow found in eastern parts of the United States. See cut under Zonotrichia.—White-throated blue warbler. See warbler.—White-throated finch. See finch.—White-throated monitor, a South African varan, Monitor albigularis.—White-throated thickhead. Same as thunder-bird, 1.—White-throated warbler. See warbler.

whitetip (hwit'tip), n. A humming-bird of the genus Urosticte.

white-top (hwit'top), n. A grass, the white bent, or florin, Agrostis alba.

white-tree (hwit'trē), n. A tree of Australia and the Malay archipelago, Melaleuca Leucadendron, a probable variety of which, M. minor, furnishes cajuput-oil.

whitewall (hwit'wāl), n. Same as white-baker. [Prov. Eng.]

whitewash (hwit'wash), n. 1. A wash or liquid composition for whitening something. Especially—(a) A wash for making the skin fair.

The clergy . . . were very much taken up in reforming the female world; I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash. Addison, Guardian, No. 116.

(b) A composition of quicklime and water, or, for more careful work, of whitening, size, and water, used for whitening the plaster of walls, woodwork, etc., or as a freshening coating for any surface. It is not used for fine work.

Some dilapidations there are to be made good; . . . but a little glazing, painting, whitewash, and plaster will make it [a house] last thy time. Venbrugh, Relapse, v. 3.

2. False coloring, as of character, alleged services, etc.; the covering up of wrong-doing or defects: as, the investigating committee applied a thick coat of whitewash. [Colloq.]—3. In base-ball and other games, a contest in which one side fails to score. [Colloq.]

whitewash (hwit'wash), v. pret. and pp. whitewashed, ppr. whitewashing. [whitewash, n.] I. trans. 1. To cover with a white liquid composition, as with lime and water, etc.

There were workmen pulling down some of the old hangings and replacing them with others altering, repairing, scrubbing, painting, and whitewashing. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xlii.

2. To make white; give a fair external appearance to; attempt to clear from imputations; attempt to restore the reputation of. [Colloq.]

A whitewashed Jacobite: that is, one who, having been long a non-juror, . . . had lately qualified himself to act as a justice, by taking the oaths to Government. Scott, Rob Roy, vii.

Whitewashed, he quits the politician's strife

At ease in mind, with pockets filled for life.

Louell, Tempora Mutantur.

3. To clear by a judicial process (an insolvent or bankrupt) of the debts he owes. [Colloq.]—4. In base-ball, etc., to beat in a game in which the opponents fail to score.

II. intrans. To become coated with a white inflorescence, as some bricks.

The bricks made from them [clays on the Hudson River] usually "whitewash" or "salt-petre" upon exposure to the weather. C. T. Davis, Bricks, etc., ii. 44.

whitewasher (hwit'wash'er), n. [whitewash + -er.] One who whitewashes.

white-water (hwit'wā'tér), n. A disease of sheep.

white-water (hwit'wā'tér), v. t. To make the water white with foam by loblolling, or splashing with the flukes, as a whale: as, "There she white-waters!" a cry from the masthead.

white-wave (hwit'wāv), n. A British geometrid moth, as Cabera exanthemaria.

whiteweed (hwit'wéd), n. [From the color given by its flowers to a field.] The common oxeye daisy, a composite plant, Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum. Also called marguerite, and by the Indians white men's speed, its introduction and rapid spread in America being compared to the occupation of their country by the palefaces.

whitewing (hwit'wing), n. 1. The white-winged or velvet scoter, sea-coot, or surf-duck, Oidemia fusca deglandi: so called along the Atlantic coast of the United States. Various plumages of the bird are distinguished by gunners as black, gray, May, great May, and eastern whitewing; and it has many other local names. See cut under velvet.

2. The chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs: so called from the white bands on the wing.—Whitewing doves, the pigeons of the genus Melopelia. See white-winged.

white-winged (hwit'wíngd), a. Having the wings white, wholly or in part: specifying various birds.—White-winged blackbird, the lark-bunting, Calamospiza bicolor, the male of which is black with a conspicuous white wing-patch. See cut under Calamospiza.—White-winged coot. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. xii.

2. Whithersoever.
Nor let your Chylidren go whether they will, but know whether they goe, in what company, and what they haue done, good or euill.
Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 64.

Thou shalt let her go whither she will. Deut. xxi. 14.
A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 22.

Where has now to a considerable extent taken the place, in conversational use, of whither: thus, it would seem rather stilted to say "whither are you going?" instead of "where are you going?" Whither is still used, however, in the more elevated or serious style, or when precision is required.

Any whither! See anywhither.
Yee haue heard that two Flemings togider
Will vndertake or they goe any whither.
Or they rise once to drinke a Ferkin full Of good Beerekin.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 192.

Wood and water he would fetch vs, guide vs any whether.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 184.

No whither. See nowhither.

Wycheley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, iv. 1.

whiting-mop (hwí'ting-mop), n. [*< whiting*² + *mop*¹.] 1. A young whiting.

They will swim you their measures, like whiting-mops, as if their feet were fins, and the hinges of their knees oiled.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, II. 2.

2. Figuratively, a fair lass; a pretty girl.

I have a stomach, and would content myself
With this pretty whiting-mop.
Massinger, Guardian, iv. 2.

whiting-pollack (hwí'ting-pol'ák), n. See pollack.

whiting-pout (hwí'ting-pout), n. A gadoid fish, the bib, Gadus lucius.

whiting-tint (hwí'ting-tin), n. Bleaching-time. Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3. 140.

whitish (hwí'tish), a. [< ME. whitisshe; < whitel + *-ish*¹.] Somewhat white; white in a moderate degree; albescent.

His taste is goode, and whitisshe his coloure.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 91.

In stooping he saw, about a yard off, something whitish and square lying on the dark grass. This was an ornamental note-book of pale leather stamped with gold.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xiii.

whitishness (hwí'tish-ness), n. The quality of being somewhat white; albescent.

You may more easily make the experiment, by taking good venereal vitriol of a deep blue, and comparing with some of the entire crystals . . . some of the subtle powder of the same salt, which will comparatively exhibit a very considerable degree of whitishness.

Boyle, Exper. Hist. of Colours, II. i. 12.

whitleather (hwit'leth'ér), n. [Early mod. E. whittlether, whittlether; < *white*¹ + leather.] 1. Leather dressed with alum; white leather. See leather.

whitsult (hwit'sul), n. [*< white*¹ + *soul*², sul.] A dish composed of milk, cheese, curds, and butter.

Their meat whitsult, as they call it: namely, milke, soure milke, cheese, curds, butter.
R. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, folio 66.

Whitsun (hwit'sun), a. [Formerly also Whitson, also Whisson, Whieson; < ME. whitson, wyttaun-whysson (= Icel. hvíta sunna), Whitsun; abbr. of Whitsunday or the common first element of Whitsunday, Whitsun-week, etc.] Of, pertaining to, or observed at Whitsuntide; following Whitsunday, or falling in Whitsun-week: generally used in composition: as, Whitsun-ale; Whitsun-Monday, etc.—Whitsun day. See Whitsunday.

Whitsun-ale (hwit'sun-ál), n. [Also Whitson-ale; < Whitsun + ale.] A festival formerly held in England at Whitsuntide by the inhabitants of the various parishes, who met generally in or near a large barn in the vicinity of the church, ate and drank, and engaged in various games and sports.

May-games, Wakes, and Whitsun-ales, &c., if they be not at unseasonable hours, may justly be permitted.
Burton, Anat. of Mel, p. 276.

Whitsunday (hwit'sun-dā), n. [< ME. whit-sunday, whith sounday, witsonday, wisson-day, hwite sune-dei, hwite sune-dai, etc., < AS. hwita sunnan-dæg, only in dat. case hwitan sunnan dæg (= Icel. hvítasunnudagr (cf. also hvítadagar, 'white days,' a name for Whitsun-week, hvíta-daga-vika, 'white days-week,' hvítasunnudags-vika, Whitsunday's week) = Norw. Kvitsundag, Whitsunday), < hwit, white, + sunnandæg, Sunday: see *white*¹ and Sunday. The name refers to the white garments (Icel. hvíta-ráðhir, white weeds) worn by candidates for baptism. The notion which has been current that Whitsunday is derived from the G. pŋngsten, Pentecost (see Pinkster and Pente- cost), is ridiculous.] 1. The seventh Sunday after Easter; a festival of the church in commemoration of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

Have hatte of floures as fresh as May,

2. In Scotland, one of the term-days (May 15th or, from the Old Style, May 26th) on which rents, annuities, ministers' stipends, etc., are paid, servants are engaged and paid, etc. The Whitsunday removal term in the towns is now fixed by law as May 28th.

Whitsun-farthings (hwit'sun-fär'fingz), n. pl. Pentecostals.

Whitsun-lady (hwit'sun-lā'di), n. The leading female character in the merrymakings at Whitsuntide.

Whitsun-lord (hwit'sun-lōrd), n. The master of the revels at the old Whitsuntide festivities.

A cooper's wit, or some such busy spark,
Illuminating the high constable and his clerk
And all the neighbourhood from old records
Of antique proverbs, drawn from Whitsunlords.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, Prolog.

Whitsuntide (hwit'sun-tid), n. [< ME. whitsontide, witsontide, whyssontide, whitesunc-tide, whitsuntide; < Whitsun + tide.] The season of Pentecost, comprehending the entire week which follows Pentecost Sunday. In the Church of England Whitsunday was appointed in 1549 as the day on which the reformed Book of Common Prayer was to be used for the first time. Whitsuntide, along with Easter, was one of the two great seasons for baptism in the ancient church, and received the name of White Sunday (Dominica Alba) from the alba or white robes of the newly baptized, as Low Sunday was also called Alb-Sunday (Dominica post Albas or in Albia depositis). See Pentecost.

The weke afore witsontide come the kynge to Cardoell, and when he was come he axed Merlin how he hadde speeded.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), l. 60.

The king then left London for the North a little before Whitsuntide, as the contemporary writer of Croyland tells us.

J. Gairdner, Richard III., vi.

Whitsun-week (hwit'sun-wēk), n. [*< ME. whitsun weke, witsun-weke; < Whitsun + week.] The week which begins with Whitsunday.

So it befelle that this Emperour cam, with a Cristene knyght with him, into a Chirche in Egypt: and it was the Saturday in Wytton weke.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 289.

whittaw (hwit'ā), n. [Appar. for whittaber.] Same as whit-tawer.

Men are busy there mending the harness, under the superintendence of Mr. Goby the whittaw, otherwise called dece.

George Eliot, Adam Bede, vi.

whit-tawer (hwit'ā'tēr), n. [< whi¹ + tawer. (cf. whityer.)] A worker in white leather; especially, a saddler. Halliwell.

whitten (hwit'n), n. [Appar. < whi¹ + -en, orig. adj. inflection-ending.] A name assigned in some old books to the guelder-rose, Viburnum Opulus (also called snowball-tree), but properly belonging to the wayfaring-tree, V. Lantana, alluding to the white under surface of its leaves, and so used in large portions of England.

whittle-whattle (hwit'i-hwat'i), n. [A varied reduplication; cf. twittle-twattle.] Vague, shuffling, or cajoling language; hence, a person who employs cajolery or other deceptive means to gain an end. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

whittle-whattle (hwit'i-hwat'i), v. i. [Sc.] To mutter; whisper; waste time by vague cajoling language; talk frivolously; shilly-shally. [Scotch.]

What are ye whittle-whattling about, ye gowk? said his gentle sister, who suspected the tenor of his murmurs.

Scott, Pirate, vi.

whittle¹ (hwit'l), n. [< ME. whittel, hwitel; < AS. hwitel (= Icel. hvitill = Norw. kvitel), a blanket or mantle, lit. a 'white mantle,' < hwit, white. (cf. E. blanket, ult. < P. blanc, white.)] Originally, a blanket; later, a coarse shaggy mantle or woollen shawl worn by West-country women in England. [Old and prov. Eng.]

When he streyneth hym to strecche the straw is hus whitel;

So for hus glotonye and grete synne he hath a greuous penaunce.

Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 76.

Her figure is tall, graceful, and alight, the severity of its outlines softening well with the severity of her dress, with the brown stuff gown, and plain gray whittle.

Kingsley, Two Years Ago, li.

whittle² (hwit'l), n. [Altered for thwittle*, < ME. thwitel, a knife, lit. 'a cutter,' < AS. thwitan, E. thwite, dial. white, cut: see thwite.] A knife; especially, a large knife, as a butcher's knife or one carried in the girdle.

There's not a whittle in the unruly camp.

Shak., T. of A., v. 1. 183.

The long crooked whittle is gleaming and bare!

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, l. 56.

I've heerd tell as whalers wear knives, and I'd ha' g'en 't gang a taste o' my whittle if I'd been cotted up just as I'd set my foot on shore.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, iv.

whittle² (hwit'l), v.; pret. and pp. whittled, ppr. whittling. [Formerly also whittle; < whittle², n.] 1. To cut or dress with a knife; form with a whittle or knife: as, to whittle a stick.

I asked about a delightful jumping-jack which made its appearance, and wished very much to become the owner, for it was curiously whittled out and fitted together by Mr. Teaby's own hands.

The Atlantic, LXV. 88.

2. To pare, or reduce by paring, literally or figuratively.

We have whittled down our loss extremely, and will not allow a man more than three hundred and fifty English shilins.

Walpole, Letters, II. 60.

3. To intoxicate; make tipsy or drunk. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

After the Britans were wel whittled with wine, he fell to taunting and girding at them.

Veretegan, Rest. of Decayed Intelligence (ed. 1628), p. 280.

II. intrans. 1. To cut wood with a pocket-knife, either aimlessly or with the intention of forming something; use a pocket-knife in cutting wood or shaping wooden things.

Here is a boy that loves to run, swim, . . . make faces, whittle, fish, tear his clothes.

O. W. Holmes, Professor, viii.

The Meggar boys . . . produce knives simultaneously from their pockets, split each a good splinter off the palms, and begin whittling.

W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 264.

2†. To confess at the gallows. [Cant.]

When his last speech the loud hawkers did cry,
He swore from his cart, it was all a damn'd lie! . . .

Then said, I must speak to the people a little,
But I'll see you all damn'd before I will whittle.

Swift, Clever Tom Clinch.

Whittlesey (hwit'l-si-i), n. [Named after C. Whittlesey (see def.).] The generic name of a plant first found by Charles Whittlesey in the coal-measures at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and named by J. S. Newberry in honor of its discoverer (1853). This plant is known only by its leaves, of which the nervation is very peculiar, excluding it from all other known genera. The generic characters, as given by Lesqueroux, are—"frond simple or pinnate, nerves fasciculate, confluent to the base, not dichotomous, fructification unknown." The leaves have a peculiar truncate form, are somewhat fan-like in shape, and dentate at the upper border, but entire on the sides and rapidly narrowing into a short petiole. This plant, of which the nervation has some analogy with that of the glenck, was placed by Lesqueroux with the Noeggarathiceæ; Schenk considers it as possibly belonging to the gymnosperms. Whittlesey has been found in various localities, always low down in the coal-measures.

whittle-shawl (hwit'l-shāl), n. Same as whittlet.

whittlings (hwit'lingz), n. pl. Chips or bits produced in whittling.

whitwall (hwit'wāl), n. Same as witwall.

Whitwell stove. One of various forms of stove, on the regenerative principle, which are used for heating the air for the supply of an iron furnace working with the hot-blast. The heating-surfaces in the Whitwell stove consist of broad spaces and flat walls instead of the checkerwork usually employed. Such stoves have been built having a height of 70 feet and a diameter of over 20.

Whitworth gun. See gun¹.

whity (hwi'ti), a. [< whi¹ + -y¹.] Rather white; whitish.

whity-brown (hwi'ti-broun), a. Of a whitish color with a brownish tinge; light yellowish-gray: as, whity-brown paper. Different shades of paper have at different times been so designated.

whityer (hwit'yēr), n. [< whi¹ + -yer, -ier¹. Cf. whiter, whistler.] The word survives in the surname Whittier.] A bleacher; a whitster.

whiz, r. and n. See whizz.

whizzig, n. A mechanical toy.

whizlet (hwi'z'l), v. i. [A freq. of whiz.] To whizz; whistle. [Rare.]

Stanhurst, Ruedel, l. 93.

whizz (hwiz), v. i.; pret. and pp. whizzed, ppr. whizzing. [= Icel. hrisga, hiss, run with a hissing sound, said of streams, etc.; an imitative word, like buzz, buzz, whistle, etc.] 1. To make a humming or hissing sound, like that of an arrow or ball flying through the air.

God, in the whizzing of a pleasant wind,
Shall march upon the tops of mulberry trees,
To cool all breasts that burn with any griefs,
As whilom he was good to Moyse's men.

Peete, David and Bethsabe.

The exhalations whizzing in the air
Give so much light that I may read by them.

Shak., J. C., II. 1. 44.

2. To move, rush, or fly with a sibilant humming sound.

How the quott

Whizzed from the Stripling's arm.

Wordsworth, Excursion, vii.

Parried a musket ball with a small sword, inasmuch that he absolutely felt it whiz round the blade.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 442.

whizz, whiz (hwiz), n. [< whizz, v.] A sound between hissing and humming; a sibilant or whistling hum, such as that made by the rapid flight of an arrow, a bullet, or other missile through the air.

Every soul it passed me by,

Like the whizz of my cross-bow!

Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

whizzer (hwiz'er), n. A centrifugal machine used for drying sugar, grain, clothes, etc.

From the whizzer the wheat passes to the smut machine.

(2) A clause dependent in form, but adding a distinct idea. Here the relative force is almost entirely lost, who becoming equivalent to and with a demonstrative pronoun.

He trod the water,

Whose enmity he flung aside.

Shak., Tempest, II. 1. 116.

The young man . . . at last married her, to whose wedding, amongst other guests, came Apollonius, who . . . found her out to be a Serpent, a Lamia.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 438.

(b) With reference to gender, who originally noted a masculine or feminine antecedent, whether human, animate, or other, the neuter being what; and whose, the possessive (genitive) of who, was also that of what, and is still correctly used of a neuter antecedent (see what). Moreover, before the appearance of the possessive its, whose place was filled by the neuter his (see he, l. c. (b)), not only were neuter objects designated in the two other cases by he and him, but who and whom were sometimes substituted for that as the nominative and objective of the neuter relative (see the quotation from Puttenham). In modern use, however, who and whom are applied regularly to persons, frequently to animals, and sometimes even to inanimate things when represented with some of the attributes of humanity, as in personification or vivid description.

(c) With reference to the nature of its antecedent, who may note—(1) a particular or determinate person or thing (see (a)); or (2) an indefinite antecedent, in which case who has the force of whoso, whosoever, or whoever, and is called an indefinite relative. Its antecedent may be expressed, or it may be a compound relative.

=Syn. Who, which, and that agree in being relatives, and are more or less interchangeable as such; but who is used chiefly of persons (though also often of the higher animals), which almost only of animals and things (in old English also of persons), and that indifferently of either, except after a preposition, where only who or which can stand.

Some recent authorities teach that only that should be used when the relative clause is limiting or defining: as, the man that runs fastest wins the race; but who or which when it is descriptive or coordinating: as, this man, who ran fastest, won the race; but, though present usage is perhaps tending in the direction of such a distinction, it neither has been nor is a rule of English speech, nor is it likely to become one, especially on account of the impossibility of setting that after a preposition; for to turn all relative clauses into the form "the house that Jack lived in" (instead of "the house in which Jack lived") would be intolerable. In good punctuation the defining relative is distinguished (as in the examples above), by never taking a comma before it, whether it be who or which or that. Wherever that could be properly used, but only there, the relative may be, and very often is, omitted altogether: thus, the house Jack built or lived in; the man (or the purpose) he built it for. The adjective clause introduced by a relative may qualify a noun in any way in which an adjective or adjective phrase, either attributive or appositional, can qualify it, and has sometimes a pregnant implication of one or another kind: as, why punish this man, who is innocent? I.e. seeing, or although, he is innocent (= this innocent man). But a relative is also not rarely made use of to add a coordinate statement, being equivalent to and with a following pronoun: as, I studied geometry, which I found difficult (and [I] found it difficult); I met a friend, who kindly showed me the way (and he kindly, etc.). This way of employing the relative is by some regarded as a Latinism, and condemned; it is restricted to who and which.

MHG. G. heil, sound, whole, saved, = Icel. heill = Sw. hel = Dan. heel = Goth. hails, hale, whole, = OBulg. ciolŭ, whole, complete; perhaps allied to Gr. kalos, excellent, good, hale, and Skt. kalya, hale, healthy (> kalyāna, prosperous, blessed). From whole (AS. hāl) are also ult. E. wholesome, wholesale, wholly, *heal*¹, health, healthy, and the second element of wassail; from the Scand. form (Icel. heill) are ult. E. *hale*², *hail*², etc. The change of initial ho- to who- was a dial. peculiarity, there being an actual change of pronunciation (hō to hwō), due to the labializing effect of the long ō; the change was reflected in the spelling, which in some words, as whole, whoop, whore, what, came into literary use, while the orig. pronunciation with simple h remained or prevailed. In dial. use the who- (hwo-) thus developed was afterward reduced in some districts to wo-, as wot for whot (orig. whote) for hot (orig. hote). Whole is one of the words which the American Philological Association and the English Philological Society include in their list of spellings to be amended, recommending the restoration of the old form hole, in keeping with the derived or related holy, *heal*¹, *hale*², etc. (Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., 1886, p. 127.) I. a. 1. Hale; healthy; sound; strong; well.

whore (hōr), n. [With unorig. w, as in whole, etc.; < ME. hore, a harlot (not in AS.), < Icel. hóra, adulteress, = Sw. hóra = Dan. hore = D. hoer = OHG. huora, huorra, MHG. huore, G. hoer (Goth. hōr, l., not found, another word, kalki, being used); also in masc. form, Icel. hōrr = Goth. hōrs, adulterer; cf. AS. hōr, adultery (in comp. hōrcwæn, adulteress), < Icel. hōr = Sw. Dan. hor = OHG. huor, adultery; cf. MHG.

herge, f., a prostitute; OBulg. kurwa = Pol. kurwa = Lith. kurva, adulteress (perhaps < Teut.). Some compare Ir. caraim, love, cara, friend, L. cārus, dear, orig. loving (see caress), Skt. chāru, agreeable, beautiful, etc. The word was confused or homiletically associated in early ME. with ME. hore, < AS. horu (horw-) = OS. horu, horo = OFries. hore = OHG. horo, filth, dirt. By some modern writers it has been erroneously derived from *hire*¹, as if 'one hired,' the notion really present in the equiv. L. meretriz, a prostitute (see meretriz). The vowel in this word was orig. long, and the reg. mod. form would be hoor* (hōr), the pron. hōr instead of hōr (as given by Walker beside hōr) is prob. due to the confusion with the ME. hore, filth, and to the later confusion of the initial ho- with who-, as also in whole. The word, with its derivatives, is now avoided in polite speech; its survival in literature, so far as it survives, is due to the fact that it is a favorite word with Shakespeare (who uses it, with its derivatives, 99 times) and is common in the authorized English version of the Bible. The word in all its forms (whoredom, etc.) is generally retained in the revised version of the Old Testament, though the American revisers recommended the substitution of harlot, as less gross; in the revised version of the New Testament harlot (with fornicator for whoremonger, etc.) is substituted.] A woman who prostitutes her body for hire; a prostitute; a harlot; a courtesan; a strumpet; hence, in abuse, any unchaste woman; an adulteress or fornicatress. [Now only in low use.]

Do not marry me to a whore. Shak., M. for M., v. 1, 521.

He wooed her and sued her his mistress to be,
And offered rich presents to Mary Ambree. . . .

"A mayden of England, sir, never will bee
The whore of a monarch," quoth Mary Ambree.

Mary Ambree (Child's Ballads, VII, 118).

6. In cricket: (a) The object at which the bowler aims, and before which, but a little on one side, the batsman stands. It consists of three stumps, having two bails lying in grooves along their tops. See *cricket*² (with diagram).

The wicket was formerly two straight thin battons called stumps, twenty-two inches high, which were fixed into the ground perpendicularly six inches apart, and over the top of both was laid a small round piece of wood called the ball. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 175.

A desperato fight . . . between the drovers and the farmers with their whips and the boys with cricket-bats and wickets. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 4.

(b) A batsman's tenure of his wicket. If the batting side pass their opponents' full score with (say) six players to be put out, they are said to win "by six wick- ets"—a colloquial abbreviation for "with six wickets to go down." (c) The ground on which the wickets

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

wicket-keeper (wik'et-ké'pér), n. In cricket, the player belonging to the fielding side who stands immediately behind the wicket to stop such balls as pass it. See diagram under *cricket*².

"I'm your man," said he. "Wicket-keeper, cover-point, slip, or long-stop—you bowl the twisters, I'll do the fielding for you." Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. xiii.

wicket-work (wik'et-wérk), n. In coal-mining, a variety of pillar and stall work sometimes adopted in the North Wales coal-field. The headings or stalls (called wickets) are sometimes as much as 24 yards wide, and the pillars as much as 15. Two roadways are generally carried up each wicket.

wicking (wik'ing), n. [*wick*¹ + -ing¹.] The material of which wicks are made, as in long pieces which can be cut at pleasure.

Generally the traces of musk-cattle are in mass—like balls all melted together. . . . It struck me it would make capital wicking for Esquimaux lamps.

C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition (1876), p. 161.

wickiup, wicky-up (wik'i-up), n. [Amer. Ind.]
An American Indian house or hut; especially, a rude hut, as of brushwood, such as is built by the Apaches and other low tribes: in distinction from the tepee of skins stretched on stacked lodge-poles. Wickiups are built on the spot as

Bp. Hall, Contemplations, viii. 1.

9. In phonetics, uttered with a comparatively relaxed or expanded condition of the walls of the buccal cavity: said by some phonetists of certain vowels, as ē, ē, ō, ū, when compared with ā, ā, ē, ē.—To cut a wide swath. See swath.—To give a wide berth to. See berth.—Wide-angle lens. See lens.—Syn. Wide, Broad, spacious, large, ample. Wide and broad may be synonymous, but broad is generally the larger and more emphatic: a wide river is not thought of as so far across as a broad river. Wide is sometimes more applicable to that which is to be passed through: as, a wide mouth or aperture. It is another way of stating this fact to say that wide has more in mind than broad the limiting sides of the thing. Wide is also more generally applicable to that of which the length is much greater than the width, but not to the exclusion of broad. Each may in a secondary sense be used of length and breadth: as, broad acres: a wide domain.

II. n. 1. Wideness; breadth; extent. [Rare.]

Emptiness and the waste wide

Of that abyss. Tennyson, Two Voices.

2. In cricket, a ball that goes wide of the wicket, and counts one against the side that is bowling.

Widmannstättian (wid-man-stet'i-an), a. Pertaining to Aloys Beck von Widmannstätt, of Vienna (1753-1849).—Widmannstättian figures, the name given to certain peculiar markings seen on the polished surfaces of many meteoric irons (siderolites) when these have been acted on by an acid. They were first noticed by Widmannstätt in 1806, on the Agram meteorite. The general appearance of these markings may be learned from the annexed figure, which is a copy of a photograph, of natural size, of a part of an etched section of the Laurens county (South Carolina) meteoric iron. The Widmannstättian figures are sections of planes of cleavage or of crystalline growth, along which segregation, or chemical change of some sort, has taken place, and whose form and position with reference to each other are in accordance with the laws governing the development of crystalline substances belonging to the isometric system. Reichenbach divided these figures into what he called a trias (more properly a triad)—namely, kamacite (Balken Eisen), tenite (Band Eisen), and plessite (Pill Eisen)—the first consisting, so far as has been as yet made out, of distinct plates of iron, with a comparatively small percentage of nickel; the second consisting of thinner plates enveloping the kamacite, and richer in nickel; and the third being a sort of ground-mass filling the cavities, and having less obvious indications of structure and generally a darker color than the others. It has frequently been stated that some meteoric irons do not exhibit the Widmannstättian figures, and that consequently their absence is not a proof of non-celestial origin; it is certain, however, that few, if any, siderolites do not show traces of some kind of structure, although investigators in this branch of science are by no means agreed as to what kind of figures are properly designated by the name Widmannstättian. A somewhat similar uncertainty prevails with regard to the figures developed by etching on the terrestrial iron of Oriskany: so that, at the present time, it cannot be said that the Widmannstättian figures furnish a positive criterion by which the authenticity of a meteoric iron may be established; yet it is certain that well-developed figures of this kind do render it highly probable that the specimen in which they are seen is extraterrestrial. A classification of meteoric irons on the basis of the different forms of figures which they exhibit, in the present condition of this branch of science, does not seem to be justifiable, although this has been attempted.

MHG. wip*, G. weib = Icel. víf (used only in poetry) = Sw. wif = Dan. wif, woman; not found in Goth. and not traced outside of Teut.; root unknown. It cannot be connected, as commonly thought, with weave. Some compare Skt. vip, tremble, L. vibrare, vibrate, quiver, OHG. weibōn, waver, be inspired, be irresolute, and suppose that the word orig. meant 'something inspired' (the Germans orig. seeing in woman sanctum aliquid et providum), or that it orig. meant 'trembling,' with ref. to the timidity of a bride. Some connect it with Goth. waiþjan, wind, twine, in bi-waiþjan, wind about, clothe, envelop, because of a woman's 'enveloping clothing,' or because she is the 'one who binds or unites herself.' These are all vagaries. The earlier Teut. word, the one with other Indo-European cognates, is that represented by queen, quean. The neuter or inadequate significance of the word is prob. indicated also by the formation in AS. of the appar. more distinctive word wifman, whence ult. F. woman.] 1. A woman: now only in rural or provincial use, especially in Scotland, and usually with an adjective, or in composition with a noun, implying a woman of humble position: as, old wives tales; a fishwife.

Wild animals, those animals, and especially those beasts, which have not been reclaimed from the feral state, or domesticated for the use and benefit of man: technically called feræ naturæ.—Wild anise-tree. See anise.—Wild apricot. See apricot.—Wild ash.

Wild ass, any member of that section of the genus Equus to which the domestic ass belongs, except this species. There are several species or varieties, not all of which are well determined, native of northern Africa, and especially of western and central Asia. Some are very large, strong, and swift animals, which have been distinguished from remote antiquity, and were formerly hunted for sport or for their flesh. Representations of the chase of wild asses are found on Assyrian monuments, and the Hebrew words translated "wild ass" in the Bible indicate their swift-footedness. See daiggetai and mager (with cuts) and hemione.—Wild balsam-apple, barley, basil. See the nouns.—Wild bean. See Apis and Strophantia.—Wild bee, any bee excepting the hive-bee as domesticated by man. Both social and solitary wild bees are of very numerous species and many genera of the two families Apidae and Andrenidae. See these words, and also such distinctive names as bumblebee, carpenter-bee, rephenter-bee, etc., with various cuts; also maison-bee, and cuts under Anthophora and Xylocopa.—Wild beet, Beta maritima of Europe, the supposed original of the cultivated beet; also, sometimes, the marsh-rosemary, Statice Limonium.—Wild bergamot, a strongly aromatic labiate plant, Monarda fistulosa, common in dry ground in North America. The corolla is commonly purplish, an inch long.

Wild birds, those birds which are not domesticated; specifically, in Eng. law, those birds that come within the provisions of an act passed in 1880, entitled the Wild Birds Protection Act, which prohibited the taking or killing of any wild bird between certain dates of each year, with some exceptions. But the species designated in the schedule annexed to the act were but about eighty in number, thus including but a small fraction of the actual avifauna of England; and some of the commonest song-birds it was desired to protect by this act were left unspecified.—Wild boar, boar, boar. See the nouns.—Wild brier, the dogrose, Rosa canina; also, the sweet-brier, Rosa rubiginosa.—Wild camomile. Same as feverfew, 1.—Wild canary, the American goldfinch, Spinus or Chrysomitris tristis. See cut under goldfinch. (Local, U.S.).—Wild caper. See Canis, Cyon, 2, and cuts under buamnah, dhote, and dingo.—Wild dove, in the United States, the common Carolina dove, or mourning-dove, Zenaidura macroura. The implied antithesis is wild pigeon, namely, the passenger-pigeon. See cut under dove.—Wild duck, any duck excepting the domesticated duck; specifically, the wild original of the domestic duck, Anas boschas (or boschas, or boschas). See cut under mallard.—Wild elder. See elder, 2.—Wild engine. (a) A locomotive running over a railway without regard to schedule time. (b) A locomotive which by some accident or derangement has escaped from the control of its driver.—Wild fig. See fig, 2.—Wild flag. See Pater-sonia.—Wild fowl. See wild-fowl.—Wild ginger. See ginger, 1.—Wild goat, any species of the genus Capra, in a broad sense, which has not been domesticated, as the ibex, etc.; specifically, the wild original of the domestic goat, C. agagrus (see agagrus, with cuts). Several different Hebrew words rendered alike "wild goat" in the Bible in different places are believed with good reason to mean any one of the ibexes, streblocephalus, or bouquetins of Syria, Palestine, Arabia, and parts of Egypt—as, for example, the beden or jail-goat, technically C. jaisal or jaisal, and as inhabiting Mount Sinai named C. sinaiticus by Bemp-rich and Ehrenberg. These wild goats differ little from the common ibex of the Alps.—Wild goose, a bird of the goose kind, or genus Anser in a broad sense, which is wild or feral. In Great Britain the common wild goose is the grayling, Anser cinereus or ferus, and the term is applied to all the other species which visit that country. (See cut under grayling.) In North America wild geese are unqualified commonly meant the Canada goose, Bernicla canadensis. See cut under Bernicla.—Wild-goose chase. See chase, 1.—Wild-goose plum. See plum, 1.—Wild gourd. See vine of Sodom, under vine.—Wild hay, hide, honey, hyessop. See the nouns.—Wild hop, the common bryony, Bryonia dioica.—Wild horse, any specimen of the horse, Equus caballus, now living in a state of nature. The wild original of the horse is unknown. All the wild horses of America and Australia, and probably all those of Asia, are the ferine (not truly feral) descendants of the domestic horse, which have reverted to the wild state.

Wild huntsman, a legendary huntsman, especially in Germany, who with a phantom host goes careering over woods, fields, and villages during the night, accompanied with the shouts of huntsmen and the baying of hounds.—Wild hyacinth, in the United States, the eastern camass, Camassia (Sollia) Fraseri; in England, the bluebell, Sollia nutans.—Wild indigo. See Amorpha and Baptisia.—Wild ipocacuanha growing wild; also, Tripterygium perfoliatum.—Wild Irishman, a rhannaceous shrub, Dicaria australis, of New Zealand and Australia, having a tortuous stem and opposite branches of which the outermost form sharp spines, the leaves small, in fascicles, absent in old plants.—Wild jalap. Same as man-of-the-earth.—Wild jasmine. See jasmine and Isora.—Wild kale, land, lettuce, moorice, mangosteen, etc. See the nouns.—Wild lemon, the May-apple Podophyllum peltatum: so named from the form and color of the fruit.

Wild lime. See lime, 3, Limonia, and tallow-nut.—Wild mahogany, the white mahogany of Jamaica, Antirrhoea bifurcata.—Wild mamme-apple, the West Indian tree Rheedia laterifolia, of the Guttiferae.—Wild mandrake, the May-apple Podophyllum peltatum.—Wild mango. See Spondias.—Wild mare. (a) The nightmare. Haliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (b) A seesaw. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 4. 268.—Wild marjoram. See marjoram, and cut under Origanum.—Wild masterwort. goodes, that day he would have his life also if he could.
Darrell Papers, 1583 (II. Hall, Society in Elizabethan Age, [App. II.])

And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.
John v. 40.

Oh, sir, the multitude, that seldom know any thing but their own opinions, speak that they would have.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, I. 1.

Will you permit the orphan—nephew to whom you have been a father—to offer you a trifle [a ring]?
Scott, Antiquary, xxx.

2. To be (am, is, are, etc.) determined (to do, etc.): said when one insists on or persists in being or doing something; hence, must, as a matter of will or pertinacity; do (emphatic auxiliary) from choice, wilfulness, determination, or persistence.

Alas, the general might have pardon'd follies!

3. To make (it) a habit or practice (to do, etc.); be (am, is, are, etc.) accustomed (to do, etc.); do usually: noting frequent or customary action.

Joves halt it greet humblesse
And vertu eek, that thou wolt make
A nyght ful ofte thyne heed to ake.
Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 681.

Whan he had souped at home in his house, he wolde call before hym all his seruantes.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, III. 29.

I remember the hot summer Sunday afternoons, when the pavement would be red-hot, and the dust, and bits of straw, and scraps of paper, would blow fitfully about with every little puff of air.
E. H. Yates, Recollections and Experiences, I. vii.

4. To be (am, is, are, etc.) sure (to do, etc.);
do undoubtedly, inevitably, or of necessity; ought or have (to do, etc.); must: used in incontrovertible or general statements, and often, especially in provincial use, forming a verb-phrase signifying no more than the simple verb:
as, I'm thinking this will be (that is, this is) your daughter.

I am afeard there wylle be sumthyng amys.
Coventry Mysteries (ed. Halliwell), p. 395.

A little difference, my dear. . . . There will be such in the best-regulated families. Thackeray, Philip, xxvi.

"Are you seeing any angels, Rob?" . . . "I'm not sure;
. . . it is not easy to tell what will be an angel, and what will not. There's so much all blue up there."
Geo. MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine, xix.

5. To be (am, is, are, etc.) ready or about (to do, etc.): said of one on the point of doing something not necessarily accomplished.

As the queene hem saugh, she wiste well she was betrayed, and wolde crye as she that was sore affraied, and thei seide that yef she spake eny worde she sholde a-non be slaine. Martin (E. E. T. S.), III. 463.

6. In future and conditional constructions, to be (am, is, are, etc.) (to do, etc.): in general noting in the first person a promise or determination, and in the second and third mere assertion of a future occurrence without reference to the will of the subject, other verb-phrases being compounded with the auxiliary shall. For a more detailed discrimination between will and shall, see shall, B., 2.

And al the better sule ge speden,
If ge wilen gee with trewele leden.

3. Wish; request; command.

Tell me now, Mr. Acres. In case of an accident, is there any little will or commission I should execute for you?

Sheridan, The Rivals, v. 3.

4. Expressed wish with regard to the disposal of one's property, or the like, after death; the document containing such expression of one's wishes; especially, in law, the legal declaration of a person's intentions, to take effect after his death. The essential distinction between a will and any other instrument or provision contingent upon death is that a will has no effect whatever until death, and may be freely revoked meanwhile; but a deed which may create or convey an estate in the event of death must take effect as binding the grantor in his life-time. In English law the word will was originally used only of a disposition of real property to take effect at death, the word testament being then used, as in the Roman and civil law, of a disposition of personal property; hence the phrase, now redundant, last will and testament. In modern usage the term will does not necessarily imply an actual disposition of property; for an instrument, executed with the formalities required by law, in which the testator merely appoints a guardian for his child, or merely nominates an executor, leaving the assets to be distributed by the executor among those who would take by law, is a will. In respect of form, that which distinguishes a written will from other instruments consists in the ceremonies which the law requires for a valid execution, for the sake of guarding against mistake, fraud, and undue influence. Nuncupative wills, however, are not subject to these rules. These formalities are generally four: (1) The testator must subscribe at the end or foot of the writing. (2) He must do so in the presence of witnesses. In some jurisdictions three are required. In some jurisdictions it is enough that he acknowledge to the witnesses that the subscription he has previously made is his. (3) He must at the same time publish the will—that is, declare to the witnesses that it is his will. (4) They must thereafter in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of one another, subscribe their names as witnesses. In some jurisdictions a seal is necessary with the testator's signature. One whose testimony as a subscribing witness becomes necessary to prove it can take no gift by the will.

After Christ had made his will at this supper, and given strength to his will by his death, and proved his will by his resurrection, and left the church possessed of his estate by his ascension, . . . he poured out his legacy of knowledge.

Donne, Sermons, xxviii.

Her last will Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.

Ps. xxvii. 12.

The Prince was so devout and humble that he submitted his Body to be chastised at the Will of Dunstan Abbot of Glastenbury.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 11.

6. The faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. The will should not be confused (as it is, however, by different writers) with self-control, desire, choice, or attention, although the first and last of these are special modes of volition. Nor is "willing" a table to move automatically across a room an act of will; for experiment shows that effort of this kind, however strenuous, fails to cause even the willer's own hand or foot to move. Normally, the consciousness of action is merged in sensations coming from the member moved; but in cases of anaesthesia the agent is still aware of being in action, and even more or less of what he is doing. This consciousness always involves a sense of opposition, whether in the form of a struggle or of a triumph, or in the negative aspect of a sense of freedom. (See freedom of the will, below.) We are always aware of some resistance, be it only the inertia of our limbs. Willing thus essentially involves perceptive sensation, the reflexio of Thomas Aquinas. (See reflexion, 7.) When the real object with which we are in relation is studied with reference to the predicates attributed to it by the senses, the result is experience; but when the predicates are inwardly inclined to attach to it are studied out, the operation is deliberation, terminating in choice, and commonly followed by acts of will. This cognitive process is the necessary condition of self-control. By a "strong will" is sometimes, and perhaps most correctly, meant great self-control; but more usually a power of bearing down the wills of others by tiring them out and by a domination like hypnotism is intended.

Appetite is the Will's solicitor, and the Will is Appetite's controller; what we covet according to the one by the other we often reject.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. viii. § 3.

Every man is conscious of a power to determine in things which he conceives to depend upon his determination. To this power we give the name of will.

Reid, Intellectual Powers, II. 1.

7. The act of willing; the act of determining a choice or forming a purpose; volition.

Even actual sins, committed without will,

Are neither sins nor shame—much more compell'd.

Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, III. 2.

It is necessary to form a distinct notion of what is meant by the word Volition in order to understand the import of the word Will, for this last word properly expresses that power of the mind of which volition is the act. . . . The word will, however, is not always used in this its proper acceptance, but is frequently substituted for volition, as when I say that my hand moves in obedience to my will.

D. Stewart, Works (ed. Hamilton), VI. 345.

Antecedent will. See antecedent.—At will (at) At command; in thorough mastery.

He that can find two words of concord cannot find four or five or six, unless he have his own language at will.

Pattenham, Arte of Eng. Poetrie, p. 73.

(b) At pleasure; at discretion. To hold an estate at the will of another is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor. See estate at will, under estate.

ge schul wite of zoure sone

That ge long haue for-lore leue me for sothe,

& him winne a-zen at will.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2955.

We know more from nature than we can at will communicate.

Emerson, Nature, IV.

And if we think of various sensations in parts of our bodies we can produce them at will, and can induce at our pleasure other bodily alterations through emotional excitement.

F. H. Bradley, Mind, XIII. 27.

Conjoint will, joint will, mutual wills, legal phrases often used without much discrimination. Especially—(a) A testamentary act by two persons jointly uniting in the same instrument, as their will, to take effect after the death of both. (b) A similar instrument to take effect as to each on his or her death. These two classes are more properly termed joint or conjoint. (c) Wills made in connection by two persons pursuant to a compact, binding each to the other to make the dispositions of property thus declared. (d) Wills made to bequeath the effects of the one first dying to the survivor. These two classes, and particularly the last, are more appropriately termed mutual. The legal effect of such wills is often a matter of doubt—Factum of a will. See factum. Freedom of the will, a mental attribute the existence of which is disputed. The phrase is taken in different senses by different thinkers.

(a) The power of doing right on all occasions. (b) That freedom of which we have an immediate consciousness in action. This is, however, only the consciousness of being able to overcome some unspecified resistance to some unspecified extent, which implies and is implied in the fact of resistance, and is in fact but an aspect of the sense of action and reaction. (c) The power of acting from an inward spontaneity, not altogether dominated by motives. This is what most of the metaphysical advocates of the freedom of the will specifically contend for. It is a limitation of the action of causality, even in the material world. Some would restrict the spontaneous power of the mind to making particles averse without variation of their viviva; but this is untenable, since the law of action and reaction, which would thus be vitiated, is far more securely proved than that of the conservation of energy, the evidence for which is imperfect, while the objections to it are weighty. It is contended on the one hand that such spontaneity is an indispensable condition of moral action; and on the other that, if it exists, it has no direct reference to morality except in that, so far as a being is spontaneous in this sense, he is free from the moral law as well as from that of causation, and that there is neither sense nor justice in holding him responsible for mere sporadic effects of pure non-cause. Responsibility, it is argued, ought to imply that a man's conduct can be regulated by principles as efficient causes, and is not free from the influence of causation.—Free will, liberty; freedom; liberty as to choice in faith or conduct; also, the faculty of will as being free, or not absolutely subject to causation.

Certainly there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief—affecting free will in thinking, as well as in acting.

Bacon, Truth (ed. 1887).

We thus, in thought, never escape determination and necessity. It will be observed that I do not consider this inability to the notion any disproof of the fact of free-will.

Sir W. Hamilton, Works, p. 611.

Good will. (a) Favor; kindness. (b) Sincerity; right intention.

Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will.

Beau. and Fl., Philaster, II. 1.

King Henry, having entered a Throne in a Storm, was willing now to have a Calm. Baker, Chronicles, p. 157.

If others make easier conditions of blessedness, no wonder if their doctrine be entertained by those who are willing to be happy but unwilling to leave their sins. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. II.

I never hear any thing of the Countess [of Oxford] except just now, that she is grown tired of sublimity affairs, and willing to come to a composition with her lord. Walpole, Letters, II. 2.

The 21st day Captain Eaton came to an Anchor by us; he was very willing to have consorted with us again. Dampier, Voyages, I. 133.

2. Voluntary; cheerfully given, granted, done, or borne: as, willing service; willing poverty.

I raise him thus, and with this willing kiss I seal his pardon. Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, IV. 1.

Sad Ulysses' soul, and all the rest,

Are held with his melodious harmony

In willing chains and sweet captivity.

Milton, Vacation Exercise, I. 52.

The chief is apt to get an extra share [of the spoils], either by actual capture, or by the willing award of his comrades. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 542.

3. Characterized by promptness or readiness in action; free from reluctance, laziness, or slowness: as, a willing horse; a willing hand.

Mount the decks, and call the willing wind.

Pope, Odyssey, IX. 655.

4†. In harmony or accord; like-minded.

I am persuaded the Devil himself was never willing with their proceedings. N. Ward, Simple Coder, p. 22.

= Syn. 1. Minded.—2. Spontaneous, etc. See voluntary. willing-hearted (wil'ing-hárt'ed), a. Well-inclined; heartily consenting.

And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold: and every man that offered offered an offering of gold unto the Lord. Ex. xxxv. 22.

willingly (wil'ing-li), adv. [< ME. willingly; < willing + -ly².] In a willing manner. Specifically—(a) Of one's own will, choice, or consent; voluntarily; knowingly.

Heer I swere that never willingly

In werk ne thought I nil yow disobeye.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, I. 306.

By labour and intense study, . . . joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to after-times as they should not willingly let it die. Milton, Church-Government, II., Int.

(b) Readily; cheerfully.

Not . . . as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Phile, 14.

Proud of employment, willingly I go.

Shak., L. L. L., II. 1. 35.

They would willingly have bene friends, or have giuen any composition they could.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 90.

willingness (wil'ing-nes), n. 1. The state or character of being willing; free choice or consent of the will; readiness.

I would expend it with all willingness.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., III. 1. 150.

Satan o'ercomes none but by Willingness.

Herrick, Temptations.

Many braudo's they made, but, to appease their fury, our Capitaine prepared with as seeming a willingness (as they) to incounter them.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 177.

Constraint in all things, makes the pleasure less; Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden, Aurengzebe, II. 1.

They one after another declared their conviction of their errors, and their willingness to receive baptism. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa. II. 6.

2†. Good will; readiness.

We, having now the best at Barnet field,

Will thither straight, for willingness rids way.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 3. 21.

= Syn. 1. Forwardness, Willingness. See forwardness. will-in-the-wisp (wil'in-thē-wisp), n. Same as will-o'-the-wisp.

Willisian (wil'is-i-an), a. [< Willis (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Thomas Willis, an English anatomist, famous for his researches on the brain and nerves. Specifically, in anat.: (a) Noting a remarkable anastomosis of arteries at the base of the brain. See circle of Willis, under circle. (b) Noting the old enumeration of nine pairs of cranial nerves (now counted as twelve pairs).

Willis's disease. Diabetes.

williwaw (wil'i-wá), n. [Origin obscure.] A sudden, violent squall of wind. Also spelled willywaw.

Those whirlwind squalls, formerly called, by the sealers in Tierra del Fuego, williwaws. They may be truly termed hurricane squalls—like those at Gibraltar, in a violent Levanter. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 125.

will-less (wil'les), a. [< will¹ + -less.] 1. Lacking will-power; having no will or volition; not volitional.

A merely knowing, quite will-less being.

Du Prel, Philos. of Mysticism (trans. 1889), II. 8.

2. Involuntary.

Your blind duty and will-less resignation.

Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, I. xv.

willock (wil'ok), n. [Cf. Sc. willock, a young heron, also the puffin.] The common murre or guillemot, Uria troile or Lomvia troile, a bird of the auk family, abundant on both coasts of the North Atlantic. Also willcock. See out under murre². [Local, British.]

will-o'-the-wisp (wil'o-thē-wisp), n. 1. The ignis fatuus; hence, any person or thing that deludes or misleads by dazzling, visionary, or evanescent appearances. Also will-in-the-wisp, will-with-a-wisp, and Jack o' lantern.

All this hide and seek, this will-in-the-wisp, has no other meaning than a Christian marriage for sweet Mrs. Belinda. Vanbrugh, Provoked Wife, v. 3.

Wicked sea-will-o'-the-wisp!

Wolf of the shore! dog, with thy lying lights

Thou hast betray'd us on these rocks of thine!

Tennyson, Harold, II. 1.

2. A common fresh-water alga, Nostoc commune: so named from its sudden and seemingly mysterious appearance. See Nostoc.

willow¹ (wil'ō), n. and a. [Also dial. willy; < ME. wilow, wylow, weloghe, wilwe, wilge, < AS. welig = MD. welighe, wilghe, later wilge, D. wilg = MLG. LG. wilge, willow; root uncertain. For other names, cf. sallow² and withy.] I. n. 1. A plant of the genus Salix, consisting of trees, shrubs, and rarely almost herbaceous plants. Of the many species a few are of decided economic worth as furnishing osiers (osier willow, crack willow, purple wil- low, white willow), or for their wood (crack willow, white willow), or for their bark, which in northern Europe is esteemed equal to oak-bark for tanning. Many are excellent for fixing loose sands, some serve for hedges, while several are highly ornamental. A few plants with some similarity to the willow have borrowed its name. See osier, sallow, and the phrases below.

Black Willow (Salix nigra).

1, branch with female ament; 2, male ament; 3, capsule, opening; 4, seed; 5, leaf.

Now wylow, bushes, bromes, thing that eseth

Let plantie.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

2. The wood of the willow; hence, in base-ball and cricket, the bat.—Almond or almond-leaved willow, a moderate-sized tree, Salix amygdalina, found in wet grounds in the northern Old World, having the leaves white, but not silky beneath. It is much cultivated for basket-making. Also French willow.—Babylonian willow (of Psalm cxxvii.), probably a species of poplar, Populus Euphratica. The weeping willow was once supposed to be the tree, fancy associating its pendulous branches with the hanging of the harps. The oleander is sometimes selected as the tree. Compare weeping willow.—Bay willow. (a) Salix pentandra, a shrub or small tree of Europe and temperate Asia, having broadly ovate or oblong leaves, which are thick, smooth, and shining, rendering it highly ornamental. (b) See willow-herb.—Bedford willow. See crack willow.—Bitter willow. See purple willow.—Black willow. (a) A tree of moderate size, Salix nigra, widely distributed in North America, commonly found bending over watercourses. The wood is of little value; the bark contains salicylic acid, and is a popular domestic febrifuge. See cut on preceding page. (b) The variety Scouleriana of Salix flavescens, found on the western coast of North America, a small tree with the wood light, hard, strong, and tough. (c) Same as bay willow (a). [Local, Eng.].—Brittle willow. Same as crack willow.—Crack willow, a tall handsome tree, Salix fragilis, so called because the twigs break easily from the branches. It is native in Europe and Asia, and is often cultivated, affording, with the closely related white willow, the best willow-tilmber. A hybrid, S. Russelliana, of this and the white willow is the Bedford or Leicester willow, whose bark is said to contain more tannin than oak-bark, and more salicin than most of the genus.—Desert willow, a small tree of willow-like habit, Chilopsis saligna, of the Bignoniaceae, found in arid regions in the southwestern United States and northern Mexico. The flowers, borne in terminal racemes, have a funnel-form corolla swollen out above, an inch or two long, colored white and purplish; the pods resemble those of Catalpa.—Diamond willow, a form of the heart-leaved willow (see below) growing on the banks of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers, having remarkable diamond-shaped scars due to the arrest of wood-growth at the base of atrophied twigs. It is made into unique canes.—Dwarf gray willow. Same as sage-willow.—French willow. (a) Same as almond willow. (b) See willow-herb.—Glaucous willow, the pussy-willow.—Glossy willow. Same as shining willow.—Goat willow, the great willow, Salix caprea. See sallow!—Golden willow or osier. See white willow.—Ground willow, Salix arctica, and perhaps other dwarf northern species. See Salix.—Heart-leaved willow, Salix cordata, the most widely distributed and variable American willow, a tall shrub with the leaves narrow but heart-shaped at the base. A variety, S. vestita, is the diamond willow (see above).—Hedge willow, the sallow, Salix caprea.—Hoop willow. Same as ring willow.—Huntington willow, the white willow.—Leicester willow, the crack willow.—Long-leaved willow. Same as sandbar willow.—Oster willow. See osier; also almond willow, purple willow, white willow.—Persian willow. See willow-herb.—Prairie willow, a grayish shrub, Salix humilis, related to the sage-willow, growing 3 to 8 feet high, common on dry plains, etc., in the United States.—Primrose willow. See Jussiaea.—Purple willow, a shrub or small tree, Salix purpurea, found through Europe and temperate Asia. Also called bitter rose, and whipcord willow. Its bark is rich in salicin, and so bitter that it is not gnawed by animals; hence this willow is specially recommended for game-proof hedges. It is at the same time one of the best osier willows.—Pussy willow. See pussy-willow.—Ring or ring-leaved willow, a variety of the weeping willow with the leaves curled into rings.—Rose willow. See purple willow.—Rosebay willow. See willow-herb.—Sage willow. See sage-willow.—Sallow willow, the common sallow, Salix caprea.—Sandbar willow, Salix longifolia, a small tree often forming dense clumps of great beauty on river sandbars and banks. It is very common throughout the Mississippi basin, and reaches its greatest development in northern California and Oregon.—Shining willow, a river-bank shrub or small tree, Salix lucida, of North America, closely allied to the bay willow of Europe, the leaves with a long tapering point, smooth and shining on both sides. It is among the most beautiful of willows, and is becoming popular in cultivation.—Silky willow. (a) The white willow. (b) Salix Sitchensis, a low much-branched tree of the Pacific coast from California northward.—Swamp willow, the pussy-willow.—Sweet willow, the sweetgale, Myrica Gale; also, the bay willow. Britten and Holland. (Prov. Eng.)—To wear the willow, to put on the trappings of woe for a lost lover.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., III. 3. 228.

Virginia or Virginian willow. See Itea.—Water willow. See water-willow.—Weeping willow, a large tree, Salix Babylonica, distinguished by its very long and slender pendulous branches, a native, not of Babylon, but of eastern Asia, now common in cultivation in Europe and America. Only the female plant is known in western countries, but it spreads to some extent by the drifting and rooting of its broken branches. It is considered an emblem of mourning, and is often planted in graveyards. The Kil-marnock weeping willow is a remarkable variety of the common sallow. There is an American weeping willow sold in nurseries, which is a partly pendulous form of the European purple willow.—Whipcord willow. See purple willow.—White willow, Salix alba, otherwise called Huntington and silky willow, perhaps the most common cultivated species, a fine tree becoming from 50 to 80 feet high, the leaves ashy-gray or silky-white on both sides. Its wood is smooth, light, soft, tough, and not subject to splintering, and is used for a great variety of purposes. It makes a good gunpowder charcoal, for which purpose it is grown in New Jersey and Delaware. The typical form is the variety S. caerulea, or blue willow. The variety S. vitellina, the golden willow or osier, with yellow twigs, is largely grown for basket-making.—Whortle willow, Salix Myrsinites, a low, sometimes closely procumbent shrub, under a foot high, with small round, ovate, or lanceolate leaves, found in the mountains of the northern Old World.—Willow scale. See scale!—Willow span-worm, one of a number of geometrid larvae which feed upon willow, as the pink-striped, the larva of Delphinia variolaria of the United States.—Willow tussock-moth, a North American tussock-moth, Orygia defuncta, whose larva seems to feed only on willow—a peculiar fact, since other tussock-moth larvae are rather general feeders.—Yellow willow, the variety vitellina of Salix alba. See white willow, above.

II. a. 1. Made of the wood of the willow; consisting of willow.—2. Of the color of the bark of young willow-wood; of a dull yellowish-green color.—Willow pattern, a design in ceramic decoration, introduced by J. Turner in his Caughley porcelain in 1780. The design is Chinese in character, but is not exactly copied from any Chinese original. It is always in blue on white or bluish-white ground.—Willow tea. See tea!

Willow Pattern.

willow¹ (wil'ō), v. t.; pret. and pp. willowed, ppr. willowing. [<willow¹, n.] To beat, as cotton, etc., with willow rods, in order to loosen it and eject the impurities; hence, to pick and clean, as any fibrous material; treat with the willow or willowing-machine.

Fine stuff, such as willowed rope.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 36.

willow² (wil'ō), n. [Also willy, willey; shonk for willow-machine or willowing-machine.] A power-machine for extracting dirt and foreign matter from hemp and flax, for cleaning cotton, and for tearing open and cleaning wool preparatory to spinning. The machines used for these different materials vary in size, but are essentially alike, and consist of a revolving cylinder armed with spikes in a cylindrical casing also armed with spikes. A part of the casing forms a grid or sieve, through which the waste falls by gravity or is drawn by a suction blast. In certain cotton manufactures it follows the opener, or is used in place of it, and is followed by the scutcher. Also called cotton-cleaning machine, devil, opening-machine, willower, willowing-machine, willow-machine, and willying-machine.

willow-beauty (wil'ō-bū'ti), n. A British geometrid moth, Boarmia rhomboidaria.

willow-bee (wil'ō-bē), n. A kind of leaf-cutting bee, Megachile willughbiella (wrongly willoughbiella), which builds its cells in willows, as originally described by Francis Willughby (1671).

willow-beetle (wil'ō-bē'tl), n. Any one of more than a hundred species of beetles which live upon the willow; specifically, a leaf-beetle, Phyllodecta vitellinae, which damages willows in England and on the continent of Europe, its larvæ feeding on the leaves and pupating underground.

willow-cactus (wil'ō-kuk'tus), n. See Rhipsalis.

willow-caterpillar (wil'ō-kat'ēr-pil-ār), n. Any one of the many different lepidopterous larvæ which feed upon the willow; specifically, the larva of the vicery (which see).

willow-cimbex (wil'ō-sim'beks), n. A very large American saw-fly, Cimbex americana, Willow-cimbex (Cimbex americana), natural size.

whose large whitish larvæ feed on the foliage of the willow, elm, birch, and linden, frequently entirely defoliating large trees. See Cimbex.

willow-curtain (wil'ō-kēr'tān), n. In hydraul. engin., a form of floating dike made of willow wands, used in western rivers in the United States as a shield against the current, and to prevent the wearing of the banks.

willow-dolerus (wil'ō-dol'ō-run), n. A small saw-fly, Dolerus arvensis, blue-black in color, found frequently on willows in the United States in May and June.

willowed (wil'ōd), a. [<willow¹ + -ed².] Abounding with willows. [Rare.]

No longer steel-clad warriors ride
Along thy wild and willow'd shore.

Scott, L. of L. M., IV. 1.

willower (wil'ō-ēr), n. [<willow¹ + -er¹.] Same as willow².

willow-fly (wil'ō-fī), n. A pseudoneuropterous insect of the family Perlidae; any perlid or stone-fly; especially, one whose larva is used for bait, as the yellow sally, Chloroperla viridis of England, or Nematura variegata of the same country. See cut under Perla.

willow-gall (wil'ō-gāl), n. Any one of numerous galls upon willow-shoots and -leaves, made mainly by gall-midges (Cecidomyiidae), but often by gall-making saw-flies of the genera Evura and Nematus. Examples of the former are the pine-cone willow-gall of Cecidomyia strobi-loides and the cabbage-sprout willow-gall of Cecidomyia salicis-brassicoides. Examples of those made by saw-flies are the willow apple-gall of Nematus salicis-pomum, the willow egg-gall of Evura salicis-ovum, and the willow bud-gall of Evura salicis-gemma.

Cabbage-sprout Willow-gall.

willow-garden

(wil'ō-gār'dn), n. A sportsmen's name for a swale grown with willows.

Snipe in the spring not unfrequently take to swampy thickets of black alder, and what are known as "willow gardens," with springy bottoms, for shelter and food.

Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 161.

willow-ground (wil'ō-grōund), n. A piece of swampy land where osiers are grown for basket-making.

willow-grouse (wil'ō-grōus), n. The willow-ptarmigan.

willow-herb (wil'ō-ərb), n. 1. A plant of the genus Epilobium, so named from the willow-like leaves of E. angustifolium, the great willow-herb. This is the most conspicuous species, a native of Europe, Asia, and North America, abounding especially in recent forest-clearings, hence in America also called free-weed. It grows from 4 to 7 feet high, and bears a long raceme of showy pink-purple flowers. Other British names are rose-bay, bay willow, French willow, and especially French willow. E. latifolium of arctic Europe, Asia, and North America, reaching Colorado in the mountains, is a much lower plant with similar showy flowers. E. albertinum is a beautiful dwarf species of the mountains of California. E. luteum, found from Oregon northward, is peculiar in its yellow flowers. Many species are not at all showy. The great willow herb and others have an unofficial medicinal use. The Indian name wicup or wicopy survives in some books. See also cut under coma.

The Inflorescence of Willow herb (Epilobium angustifolium).
a, capsule, opening; b, seed.

2. See Lythrum.—French willow-herb, the French willow. See def. 1.—Hooded willow-herb, the skullcap, Scutellaria.—Night willow-herb, the evening primrose, Oenothera biennis.—Spiked willow-herb, Epilobium angustifolium, formerly E. spicatum.—Swamp willow-herb, Epilobium palustre.

willowing-machine (wil'ō-ing-ma-shēn'), n. Same as willow².

willowish (wil'ō-ish), a. [<willow¹ + -ish¹.] Resembling the willow; like the color of the willow. I. Walton, Complete Angler, i. 5.

willow-lark (wil'ō-lärk), n. The sedge-warbler. Pennant, 1768. (Imp. Dict.)

willow-leaf (wil'ō-lēf), n. One of the elongated filaments of which the solar photosphere appears to be composed, especially in the neighborhood of sun-spots. The name was proposed by Nasmyth, but is no longer in general use, since as a rule the photospheric granules are not of a form to justify it.

willow-machine (wil'ō-ma-shēn'), n. Same as willow².

willow-moth (wil'ō-mōth), n. A common British noctuid moth, Caradrina quadripunctata, a pale mottled species whose caterpillar does much damage to stored grain.

willow-myrtle (wil'ō-mēr'tl), n. A myrtaceous tree with willow-like leaves, Agonis flexuosa, of western Australia, growing 40 feet high.

willow-oak (wil'ō-ōk), n. An American oak, Quercus Phellos, found from New York near the coast to Texas and north to Kentucky and Missouri. Its leaves are narrow and entire, strongly suggesting those of a willow. It grows some 70 feet high, and affords a heavy and strong, rather soft, wood, somewhat used for felices of wheels and in building. Also peach-oak, sand-jack. See cut under oak.—Upland willow-oak, Quercus cinerea, a tree reaching 45 feet high, found from Fortress Monroe to Texas on sandy barrens and dry upland ridges. The leaves are somewhat broader than those of the willow-oak, leathery, and white-downy beneath. Also blue-jack and sand-jack.

willow-peeler (wil'ô-pê'ler), n. A machine or device for stripping the bark from willow-wands, as a crotch with sharp edges, through which the wand is drawn. Also called willow-stripper.

willow-ptarmigan (wil'ô-tür'mi-gan), n. The common ptarmigan of North America, Lagopus albus, having in winter white plumage with a black tail, but no black stripe through the eye: distinguished from rock-ptarmigan. Also willow-grouse. The name originally applied to the European bird named L. saliceti. See dalripa and *rype*².

willow-sawfly (wil'ô-sâ'fii), n. Any one of the different saw-flies which breed upon willow, as Cimber americana, Dolerus arenensis, Nematus ventralis, and a number of others. Phyllocolpa integer is a North American species whose larvae bore into the young shoots of willow, whence it is specified as the willow-shoot saw-fly. See willow-cimber and willow-dolerus.

willow-slug (wil'ô-slug), n. The larva of any saw-fly, as Nematus ventralis, which infests willows. That of the species named, more fully called yellow-spotted willow-slug, has some economic consequence in connection with the other industry.

willow-sparrow (wil'ô-spar'ô), n. Same as willow-warbler. [Local, Eng.]

willow-thorn (wil'ô-thörn), n. Same as sal-low-thorn. See Hippophaë.

willow-warbler (wil'ô-wâr'blér), n. A small sylviine bird of Europe, Sylvia or Phylloscopus trochilus; the willow-wren. It is about 5 inches long, greenish above, whitish below, and very abundant in summer in the British Islands in woods and copests. See chiff-chaff.—Yellow-browed barred willow-warbler. See yellow-browed warbler, under warbler.

willow-weed (wil'ô-wêd), n. One of various species of Polygonum, or knotweed, as P. amphibium, P. Persicaria, or P. lapathifolium. Britton and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—2. The purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria.

willow-wort (wil'ô-wért), n. 1. The common loosestrife, Lysimachia vulgaris, or the purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria.—2. A plant of the order Salicinea, the willow family. Lindley.

willow-wren (wil'ô-ren), n. The willow-warbler: a common British name and also book-name.

willowy (wil'ô-i), a. [< willow¹ + -y¹.] 1. Abounding with willows.

Where willowy Camus lingers with delight!
Gray, Ode for Music.
Steadily the millstone hums
Down in the willowy vale.
Bryant, Song of the Sower.

2. Resembling a willow; flexible; drooping; pensile; graceful.

Willisia (wil'si-ä), n. [NL., named after one Willis.] A generic name based on medusoids of certain gymmolebastic hydroid polyps, apparently coryniform, which produce other medusoids Willisia. A, the medusa, with budding stolons. B, a bud developed on a stolon; C, its radial canal; D, its manubrium. E, a stolon; F, its free end beset with nematocysts; G, H, four budding medusoids, the last nearly ready to be detached; I, A as in fig. B.

like themselves by means of proliferating stolons; also, a designation of such medusoids. In the example figured the stolons are developed at the bifurcation of each of the four principal radiating canals of the swimming-bell, each stolon ending in a knob with a bunch of thread-cells, and giving rise along one side, to a series of buds which successively, from the free end toward the other end, acquire the character of complete medusoids. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 182.

Willughbeia (wil'ô-bê'ä), n. [NL. (Roxburgh, 1819), named for Francis Willughby, 1635-72, an English naturalist, who wrote on the use of sap in plants.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Apocynaceæ and tribe Cariaceæ. It is characterized by climbing stems, flowers in dense cymes with a five-parted salver-shaped corolla bearing its stamens near the base of its tube, and followed by a large globose berry with hard pericarp and abundant pulp, in appearance resembling an orange. By its axillary (not terminal) cymes it is further distinguished from the related climbing genus of India-rubber plants, Landolphia, for which the name Willughbeia has also been used. The genus includes 8 or 10 species, natives of India, Malacca, and Ceylon. They are arborescent shrubs, generally tendrill-bearing and climbing to great heights. The leaves are opposite, short-petioled, and feather-veined. The W. elastica of many writers, an India-rubber plant of Borneo, is now classed as Uroecia.

will-willet (wil'wil'et), n. [Cf. willot, pill-willet.] 1. Same as pill-willet.—2. The American oyster-catcher: as, "the will-willet or oyster-catcher," Bartram, Travels (ed. 1791). Lawson, 1709.

will-with-a-wisp, n. Same as will-o'-the-wisp, 1. will-worship (wil'wér'ship), n. [A lit. rendering of Gr. ἐὐλαδωπρία; < will³ + worship.] Worship according to one's own fancy; worship imposed merely by human will, not by divine authority; supererogatory worship.

Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will worship.
Col. II. 23.

Let not the obstinacy of our halfe Obedience and will Worship bring forth that Viper of Sedition that for these foure-score Years hath been breeding to eat through the entrails of our Peace.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., II.

will-worshiper (wil'wér'ship-ér), n. One who practises will-worship.

He that says "God is rightly worshipped by an act or ceremony concerning which himself hath no way expressed his pleasure"—is superstitious or a will-worshipper.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, II. III. 13.

willy¹ (wil'i), a. [< ME. willy, will³ (= G. willig, willing); < will¹ + -y¹.] 1. Willing; ready; eager.

All wight men in wer, willy to fight,
And boldly the bekirt, brinnet there fos.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 7713.

Be the willike like man that is willy
May wyne the liffe that laste schall ay.
York Plays, p. 458.

I have assayde zowr suster, and i fonde her never so willy to noon as sche is to hym, zyl i be so that his londe stonde cleer.
Paston Letters, I. 88.
